WARNING

This issue jumps out of the narrow "what's permitted" box with a little adult subject matter, and we hope that our mature readers won't experience any great loss of confidence in how The First Freedom challenges those outmoded ideas flying around that've confused many regarding the public's duty, morality and justice. No, it's not the (un)usual endorsement of peecee profanity, interracial and same-sicks marriage, or tolerance for intolerable politics, but rather the older language of honest journalism – a descending back into the memory hole to retrieve harsh history and expose such filth as would get us sued by the Defamation League if it weren't so malodorously true. What we publish is in fact adult without the childish wink.

Remember the USS Liberty March to be held in Washington, DC

By Rev. Ted Pike

Patriots are marshaling for a public demonstration in the nation's capital on June 8, drawing attention to Israel's savage attack and near sinking of the U. S. intelligence vessel, the USS Liberty, during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. Fred Shepherd, veteran of highly effective protests, is calling for patriots to testify that America isn't forgetting the treacherous (and deadly) slap in the face that our so-called "trusted democratic ally," Israel, gave America. If you can possibly lend your support and take part, please contact Fred at altencon@aol.com.

G. Edward Griffin in his book The Creature from Jekyll Island lets us look behind the scenes at who makes money and at what price. John F. Kennedy was assassinated for opposing the Fed. He called them "A monolithic and ruthless conspiracy." Kennedy had issued Executive Order 11110 to end the Fed. Six months later he was killed. President Johnson rescinded that order. The international banker globalists have never hesitated to use the most ruthless methods to protect their criminal enterprise.

Fools rush in where wise men will not go

REPLAY. Italy, France and Britain have sent experienced combat advisors to help train and organize the favored side to topple Libya’s Col. Muammar Qadhaffi. “We’re not allowed, rightly, to have an invading army, or an occupying army,” British PM Cameron told BBC Scotland radio. Have all these desktop jockeys forgotten how the horrendous U. S. military misadventure began in Vietnam? Sending in “combat advisors” in 1961 ended fourteen years later with over 58,000 U. S. soldiers killed, 153,000 wounded and at a cost of approximately $584 billion dollars.

NATO bombs a Libyan position, Col. Qadhaffi’s military evacuates temporarily and a ragtag bunch of poseurs floods in for the picture-taking, acting like soldiers for a bunch of TMFs and/or CIA media people; then they run away before the Libyan army returns. While there’s no conflict between such ones and the military, John McCain bubbles that having met “the rebel forces” was “one of the most inspiring moments” of his life, further proving that the 2008 presidential “election” was nothing but a choice between two lying clowns.

THE ASHKENAZI chief rabbi of Israel, Yona Metzger, told congregants in a Sabbath sermon last month that if U. S. President Barack Obama seeks reelection, he must release Israeli spy Jonathan Pollard, Israel Radio reported on April 17.

THE FED is bowing to the influence of Representative Ron Paul (R-Texas)! The Federal Reserve has until now ignored the public and made its decisions in secret but, noted the Wall Street Journal on April 21, Chairman Ben Bernanke was expected to hold the Fed’s first press conference ever after the April 27 Open Market Committee meeting.

Speech and religion were already ours back when FDR named “four freedoms.” But he would whip hunger, fear and oppression, abstaining forever from Europe’s wars.

FEDERAL ATTORNEYS claim Global Horizons Manpower Inc. of Beverly Hills, a labor contracting firm headed by Israeli native Mordechai Orian, subjected workers in Hawaii and Washington to violence, inadequate pay and nutrition, rat-infested housing and other such conditions because of their ethnicities. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission accuses Global Horizons Manpower of “illegal” practices on farms. The head of the firm is already facing a criminal trial on similar charges.

A GERMAN foundation admits that it supported WikiLeaks’ activities last year with donations of 402,000 euros or $585,000. Wau Holland Foundation had previously called itself WikiLeaks’ main financial backer, and a report published on its website April 26 boasted euro 1.3 million of such donations for 2010. The webmaster of whatreallyhappened.com says he’s “running for 17 years and gets nothing from the big money foundations. Assange appears literally out of nowhere and the big money foundations pour tons of cash on him. I suspect the motives of the big money foundations.”

WIKILEAKS is like the Hydra of Greek mythology. You cut off one head, another springs out, even more vicious than the one lying at your feet. After having waited until the scandal died down, discrediting Wikileaks for its ties to Israeli intelligence and its pattern of using censorship and “seeded” information to serve a pro-war agenda, 700 new documents were released April 26 on “Gitmo.”

TURKEY announced the April 21 receipt of a request from Israel to help stop activists sailing to Gaza on the first anniversary of an Israeli raid against a Turkish ship, by noting that the flotilla plan was not Ankara’s concern.

THE GREEN AGENDA is impressive, but the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change was revealed in 2009 as a hoax based on the manipulation of computer models to predict warming due to excess carbon dioxide. There never was any threat from CO2, a gas that’s vital to the growth of all vegetation on Earth.

FROM SYRIA TO EGYPT to Yemen and even the Ivory Coast, Africa is ablaze, but not with purely internally-inspired violence. U. S. State Department and CIA training and involvement got these Western-fomented revolts going. The idea is regime change, a process of “internationalization.” That isn’t, to be sure, the official line – but it’s obvious this unrest is another step in the ZOG’s plan for a one-world government.

A VIDEO of a racially-motivated attack in St. Louis is so gruesome police will not release it publicly. A wolf pack of Black teens, two male and two female, attacked an elderly Asian couple in a majority Black area. The man was beaten to death and the woman is fighting for her life in a hospital. Police say the attack was random and the perpetrators simply did it for fun. The St. Louis NBC affiliate censored the race of those suspects even though they present a clear and immediate threat to the public! This is political correctness at its worst.

Confederate flag flies in Dodge

Debra Brown with a frown says the town has put her down. But the race card game now comes around.

Submitted by 13WMAZ Web Staff

Macon, Georgia, April 20th – There’s controversy in Eastman as a Confederate flag flies at the Dodge County courthouse. The flag is flying at a Confederate memorial in front of the courthouse. As the nation marks the 150th anniversary of the Civil War, some see the flag as a part of Southern history, others as a symbol of slavery.

John Battle, head of the Dodge chapter of the NAACP, say he’s asked the county commissioners to take it down, but they won’t.

Battle says, “It’s a slap in all our faces, not just Blacks. It’s a slap in many White faces.”

In fact, after his group and others sent them a letter from a lawyer asking that the flag be removed, commissioners voted Monday to fly it 365 days a year.

Battle says, “We don’t have any heart-burns against the Confederacy veterans. We would like to see it moved from the courthouse because this is public grounds.” He says for a while, the Stars and Bars waved here at least one day a year. Now he says the flag is locked in place every day.

Monday’s decision by county commissioners brought different reactions from people around town.

Debra Brown, from Eastman, says, “I think it’s an insult. Even one day out of the year is an insult. It represents slavery. It represents prejudices.”

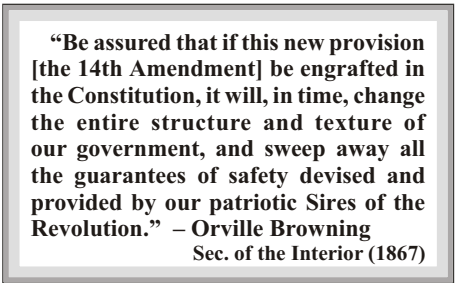

Dodge County resident Doris Barlow disagrees. She says, “I don’t see anything wrong with it myself. I’m proud to live in the south.”

Others say they see the flag for its historical meaning.

Dodge County resident Michael Daniels says, “It’s really just a tradition. People think the wrong way being prejudice. It doesn’t really mean prejudice. It just mean Confederacy.”

NAACP officials say they’ll continue to fight until it stops flying.

Battle says, “This ain’t about Black and White. This is about all ethnic groups that reside here, to try to make this a better

Seriously, now

It was time to dig his potato garden, very hard work. However, the only son of this old man living alone who normally would have helped with that job was in prison for bank robbery. The aging father wrote his son mentioning his predicament.

Shortly, he received this startling reply: “For heaven’s sake, Dad, don’t dig up the entire garden, that’s where I buried the money.”

At 4:00 AM the next morning, a dozen policemen showed up and spaded every inch of that entire garden but turned up no money. Confused, the old man wrote his son again imparting this strange news and wondered what he should do next. His son’s reply: “Now plant your potatoes, Dad. It’s the best I could do from here.”

“Once I was a monkey hanging from a tree. Now I’m a professor with a pHd.”

God made everything

God made the seas, God made the bees,
God made the trees – God made everything;
God made the rain, God made the crane,
Nothing in vain – He made everything.
God made your eyes, God made the skies,
God’s Word replies: He made everything.
He formed the birds, and all the herds,
Nothing absurd – He made everything.
God made the corn, God made the morn,
All who were born – He made everything;
God made the tear, God formed the ear,
God made it clear: He made everything.
God made the coal, Oil, gems and gold,
Yes, we are told – He made everything;
Cats, cows and swine, Leaves, roses, vines,
Oaks, maples, pines – He made everything.
He did it fast, made it to last,
Though it is vast, He made everything.
Six nights and days showed forth His Ways,
Calls for His Praise – He made everything.
Skeptics and fools ignore His rules
In all their schools, They hate everything;
Though they are blind, they say their mind
Till they unwind – He made everything.
Then when they fall, they may recall
He rules it all – God made everything,
He gave them breath, He conquers death,
’Tis He Who saith: “I made everything.”

Helen Thomas will lead NYC Gaza protest

By Rev. Ted Pike
truth Tellers.org

MY FERVENT prayer to the Almighty over the past year has been that He would energize 90-year-old former White House reporter Helen Thomas to keep speaking boldly against Jewish supremacism. Thomas has high visibility and less to lose than most public figures, so she can warn like few others.

God answers prayer! Some 100 pro-Gaza liberal groups will protest Prime Minister Netanyahu’s address to AIPAC May 21-24. Their New York conference is called “Move Over AIPAC.” Feisty Helen Thomas will deliver the keynote address and actually lead the mass protest!

Across the Atlantic, more voices are being raised against Israel. The Jewish State’s economic, humanitarian and military reprisals against 1.5 million Gazans continue to bleed the Mideast. Nearly 1,000 peace activists from many countries are inspired to launch their own “D-day” peace invasion, “Freedom Flotilla 2,” with 20 ships, to force Israel to end its occupation and quarantine.

Thus we see that a merciful God is raising powerful forces of conscience to resist the ever encroaching mega-power of Israel and Jewish supremacism. Zionism’s ultimate goal, as the Bible prophesies, is to dominate the nations. This is the anti-Christ new world order which Scripture calls Babylon the Great.

Why aren’t Christians protesting Israel’s injustices?

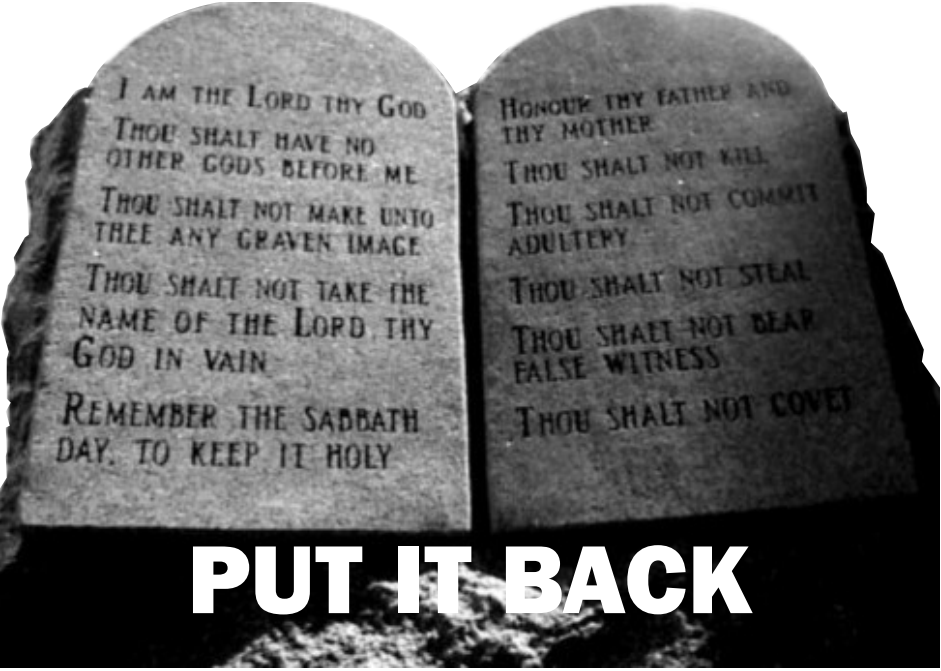

It should be Christians who protest Zionist inhumanity. It is our Scripture that warns anti-Christ Jews are “enemies of the gospel” (Romans 11:28). Our Bibles, in more than two dozen clear verses, trumpet God’s demand that a nation of unbelieving Jews should never occupy His holy land. It should have been Christians who protested Israel’s violent expulsion of more than 800,000 Palestinians in 1948. Yet mainstream evangelicals have unconditionally supported the rising anti-Christ juggernaut for the past century. Today their collective recognized that the true purpose of the legislation was to wipe out Confederate Memorial Day. By placing a Black holiday on top of the existing State holiday, the media would gleefully report the Black holiday every year and censor all mention of Confederate Memorial Day. The same thing happened with Robert E. Lee Day in Mississippi, when Martin Luther King Day was added to it.

A petition was immediately drawn up and mailed to Mississippi CofCC and SCV leaders in other States. In only two weeks, thousands of signatures were collected. Sufficient phone calls came in to State Senators that the Senate version was killed in committee!

If Black legislators want a “Civil Rights Day,” they can add it to Martin Luther King Day. Leave the last remaining State holiday to honor our Southern Patriots and forefathers alone.

EDITOR’S NOTE

88 precepts

By David Lane
(P.O.W.)

“We must secure the existence of our people and a future for White children.
“Because the beauty of the White Aryan woman must not perish from the earth.”

The eighth eight

57. Propaganda is a legitimate and necessary weapon in any struggle. The elements of successful propaganda are: simplicity, emotion, repetition and brevity. Also, since men believe what they want to believe, and since they want to believe that which they perceive as beneficial to themselves, then successful propaganda must appeal to the perceived self-interest of those to whom it is disseminated.

58. Tyrannies teach what to think; free men learn how to think.

59. Beware of men who increase their wealth by the use of words. Particularly beware of the lawyers or priests who deny Natural Law.

60. The patriot, being led to the inquisition’s dungeons or the executioner’s axe, will be condemned the loudest by his former friends and allies; for thus they seek to escape the same fate.

61. The sweet goddess of Peace lives only under the protective arm of the ready God of War.

62. The organic founding Law of a Nation must state with unmistakable and irrevocable specificity the identity of the homogeneous racial, cultural group for whose welfare it was formed, and that the continued existence of the Nation is singularly for all time for the welfare of that specific group only.

63. That race or culture which lets others influence or control any of the following will perish:

- Organs of information;
- Educational institutions;
- Religious institutions;
- Political offices;
- Creation of their money;
- Judicial institutions;
- Cultural institutions;
- Economic life.

64. Just Laws require little explanation. Their meaning is irrevocable in simplicity and specificity.

conscience is hardened, void of the most elemental compassion toward beleaguered Palestinians. Having “bidden Godspeed to evil men,” they are “partakers of [Israel’s] evil deeds” (2 John 1:11). Fulfilling Christ’s words, the “very elect, if possible” are now deceived (Matt. 24:24).

God now uses Helen Thomas and anyone with a vestige of conscience to be His spokesperson. Incredibly, baby-killing, pro-Sodomite leftists have more empathy for the Palestinians than do most evangelicals. They are more responsive than many self-proclaimed Christians to the One who said, “Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.”

What is wrong with the Church?

Historic Christianity, for at least 1,600 years, has been deeply infected with heretical doctrines which created Calvinism. This in turn has legitimized and empowered Zionism.

In my latest Bible study at truth Tellers.org (4-20-11 “What is Heresy?”) I explain how Zionist-driven chaos in the Mideast – made possible by evangelical moral and financial support – actually harks back to the 5th century AD. The Church went theologically astray after Christianity was legalized by Emperor Constantine. Great doctrinal error accumulated. It finally resulted in the current Christian/Zionist “unholy alliance.” Today a misguided Church helps establish a persecutive world system that will cause its own destruction.

Don’t waste any more time wondering why crazed evangelicals, like lemmings swimming into the sea to drown, support Christian-rejecting and persecuting Israel unconditionally. Learn the truth.

In this first of two Bible studies on heresy, I’ll also show how you, your family and Church can encourage God to create even more hopeful, unprecedented opportunities to save freedom.

Pulling the lid off Lincoln’s cesspool of disinformation

Incredible! This is one of Pat Buchanan’s greatest columns ever. It’s amazing how refreshing it can be to read simple truth in such a wicked age. This is one for every fan of The Political Cesspool as we continue with Confederate History. It perfectly sums up my personal sentiments about why the war was fought. — James Edwards thepoliticalcesspool.org

By Pat Buchanan

“This was a recognition of American terrorists.”

That is CNN’s Roland Martin’s summary judgment of the 258,000 men and boys who fell fighting for the Confederacy in a war that cost as many American lives as World Wars I and II, Korea, Vietnam and Iraq combined. Martin reflects the hysteria that seized Obamaville on hearing that Governor Bob McDonnell had declared Confederate History Month in the Old Dominion. Virginia leads the nation in Civil War battlefields.

So loud was the howling that in 24 hours McDonnell had backpedaled and issued an apology that he had not mentioned slavery. Unfortunately, the governor missed a teaching moment – at the outset of the 150th anniversary of America’s bloodiest war. Slavery was indeed evil, but it existed in the Americas a century before the oldest of our founding fathers was even born. Five of our first seven presidents were slave-holders. But Virginia did not secede in defense of slavery. Indeed, when Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated, March 4, 1861, Virginia was still in the Union. Only South Carolina, Georgia and the five Gulf States had seceded and created the Confederate States of America.

At the firing on Fort Sumter, April 12-13, 1861, the first shots of the Civil War, Virginia was still inside the Union. Indeed, there were more slave States in the Union than in the Confederacy. But, on April 15, Lincoln issued a call for 75,000 volunteers from the State militias to march south and crush the new Confederacy.

Two days later, April 17, Virginia seceded rather than provide soldiers or militia to participate in a war on their brethren. North Carolina, Tennessee and Arkansas followed Virginia out over the same issue. They would not be a party to a war on their kinfolk.

Slavery was not the cause of this war. Secession was – that and Lincoln’s determination to drown the nation in blood if necessary to make the Union whole again.

Nor did Lincoln ever deny it. In his first inaugural, Lincoln sought to appease the States that had seceded by endorsing a constitutional amendment to make slavery permanent in the 15 States where it then existed. He even offered to

Iceland declares independence from international banksters

Iceland is free! And, so long as her people remain autonomous of foreign domination by would-be masters, in this case international bankers, will stay free.

By Bill Wilson
twitter.com/billwilsonalg

On April 9, the fiercely independent people of this island nation defeated a referendum that would have bailed out the U. K. and the Netherlands, States that had covered the deposits of British and Dutch investors who had lost funds in Icesave Bank in 2008.

At the time of the bank’s failure, Iceland refused to cover the losses. But the U. K. and Netherlands nonetheless demanded that Iceland repay them for the “loan” as a condition for admission into the European Union.

In response, the Icelandic people have told Europe to go pound sand. The final vote was 103,207 to 69,462, or 58.9 percent to 39.7 percent. “Taxpayers should not be responsible for paying the debts of a private institution,” said Sigríur Andersen, a spokeswoman for the Advice group that opposed the bailout.

A similar referendum in 2009 on the issue, although with harsher terms, found 93.2 percent of the Icelandic electorate rejecting a proposal to guarantee the deposits of foreign investors who had funds in the Icelandic bank. The referendum was invoked when President Ólafur Ragnar Grímsson vetoed legislation the Alþingi, Iceland’s parliament, had passed to pay back the British and Dutch.

Under the terms of the agreement, Iceland would have had to pay £2.35 billion to the U. K., and €1.32 billion to the Netherlands by 2046 at a 3 percent interest rate. Its rejection for the second time by Iceland is a testament to this country’s people, who feel they should bear no responsibility for the losses of foreigners endured in the financial crisis.

That opposition to bailouts led to Iceland’s decision to allow the bank to fail in 2008. Not that the taxpayers there could have afforded to. As noted by Bloomberg News, at the time the crisis hit in 2008, “the banks had debts equal to ten times Iceland’s $12 billion GDP.”

“These were private banks and we didn’t pump money into them in order to keep them going; the State did not shoulder the responsibility of the failed private banks,” Iceland President Ólafur Grímsson told Bloomberg Television.

The voters’ rejection came despite threats to isolate Iceland from funding in international financial institutions. Iceland’s national debt has already been downgraded by credit rating agencies, and now those same agencies have promised to do so once again as punishment for defying the will of international bankers.

This is just the latest in the long drama since 2008 of global institutions refusing to take losses in the financial crisis. Threats of a global economic depression and claims of being “too big to fail” have equated to a loaded gun to the heads of representative governments in the U. S. and Europe. Iceland is of particular interest because it did not bail out its banks like help the Southern States run down fugitive slaves.

In 1862, Lincoln wrote Horace Greeley that if he could restore the Union without freeing one slave he would do it. The Emancipation Proclamation of January 1, 1863, freed only those slaves Lincoln had no power to free – those still under Confederate rule. As for slaves in the Union States of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri, they remained the property of their owners.

As for “terrorists,” no army fought more honorably than Robert E. Lee’s Army of Northern Virginia. Few deny that.

The great terrorist in that war was William Tecumseh Sherman, who violated all the known rules of war by looting, burning and pillaging on his infamous March to the Sea from Atlanta to Savannah. Sherman would later be given command of the war against the Plains Indians and advocate extermination of the Sioux.

“The only good Indian is a dead Indian” is attributed both to Sherman and Gen. Phil Sheridan, who burned the Shenandoah and carried out Sherman’s ruthless policy against the Indians. Both have statues and circles named for them in Washington, D. C.

If Martin thinks Sherman a hero, he might study what happened to the slave women of Columbia, S. C., when “Uncle Billy’s” boys in blue arrived to burn the city.

Ireland or foreign ones like the U. S. did.

If that fervor catches on amongst taxpayers worldwide, as it has in Iceland and with the tea party movement in America, the banks would have something to fear; that is, the inability to draw from limitless funding from gullible government officials and central banks. It appears that the root cause is government guarantees, whether explicit or implicit, on risk-taking by the banks.

Ultimately, such guarantees are not necessary to maintain full employment or even prop up an economy with growth, they are simply designed to allow these international institutions to overleverage and increase their profit margins in good times – and to avoid catastrophic losses in bad times.

Iceland rejects shakedown

By Kurt Nimmo
infofars.com

Unlike Americans, the people of Iceland were allowed to vote on bailing out the banksters. They voted overwhelmingly against the proposal on April 9 despite the intimidation tactics of the globalist loan sharking operation, the IMF.

For a second time, Icelanders rejected a scheme to “repay” – as Reuters deemed it – $5 billion to British and the Netherlands banks following the engineered looting and crash of the Kaupthing, Landsbanki and Glitnir banks. The crash all but destroyed Iceland’s economy and swindled thousands of European bank customers.

60 percent of voters opposed the shake-down while 40 percent said the country should give in to bankster intimidation.

Iceland did something unthinkable in the United States – it went after banksters and their minions. In early March, Sigurdur Einarsson, former chairman of the defunct Icelandic bank Kaupthing, was arrested in London. The Special Prosecutor’s Office in Reykjavik ordered police to raid the homes of other bank principals. Ivar Gundjonson of Iceland’s failed Landsbanki bank was also arrested.

Predictably, the corporate media have

What of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, at whose request McDonnell issued his proclamation? What racist deeds have they perpetrated of late?

They tend the graves of Confederate dead and place flags on Memorial Day. They contributed to the restoration of the home of Jefferson Davis, damaged by Hurricane Katrina. They publish the Confederate Veteran, a magazine that relates stories of the ancestors they love to remember. They join environmentalists in fighting to preserve Civil War battlefields. They do re-enactments of Civil War battles with men and boys whose ancestors fought for the Union. And they defend the monuments to their ancestors and the flag under which they fought.

Why are they vilified?

Because they are Southern White Christian men – none of whom defends slavery, but all of whom are defiantly proud of the South, its ancient faith and their forefathers who fell in the Lost Cause.

Undeniably, the Civil War ended in the abolition of slavery and restoration of the Union. But the Southern States believed they had the same right to rid themselves of a government to which they no longer felt allegiance as did Washington, Jefferson and Madison, all slave-owners, who could no longer give loyalty to the king of England.

Consider closely this latest skirmish in a culture war that may yet make an end to any idea of nationhood, and you will see whence the real hate is coming. It is not from Governor McDonnell or the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

The lesson here is instructive across the pond, but it is a chilling one. If the U. S. – or any sovereign for that matter – attempts to restructure its debts, or to force private investors to take a haircut on their own foolish gambles, these international institutions have promised the equivalent of economic war in response. However, the alternative is for representative governments to sacrifice their independence to a cadre of faceless bankers who share no allegiance to any nation.

It is the conflict that has already defined the beginning of the 21st Century. The question is whether free peoples will choose to remain free, as Iceland has, or submit.

under-reported Iceland’s efforts to arrest and prosecute bankers.

Following the outcome of Saturday’s referendum, Iceland Prime Minister Johanna Sigurðardóttir warned that the banksters will declare war on the tiny island nation. “We must do all we can to prevent political and economic chaos as a result of this.”

The court of the EFTA Surveillance Authority, the European trade racket overseeing Iceland’s cooperation with the globalist European Union, will now take up the issue. “My estimate is that the process will take a year, a year and a half at least, Finance Minister Steingrímur Sigfússon told a news conference.

“Ever since Iceland decided to stop pandering to banker interests, and transfer its country’s wealth to banks from Europe and Holland, its economy has in fact been on a constant upward trajectory,” Zero Hedge wrote on April 10. The website has two charts to show how telling the bankers to stuff it has benefited the country.

“And so a nation of 320,000 once again takes the baton of bankster liberation, while a country of 320 million continues refusing to care, even as with each passing month another $150 billion in debt is added to the public debt total.”

SWEET HOME ALABAMA:

Senate passes restrictionist immigration package

By William L. Houston
westernyouth.org

Just ask my friends: they will all tell you I think Alabama is the greatest place in the world. At times my ethnocentrism gets the best of me. But not today.

On 21 April, in a surprising move, the Alabama Senate easily passed a restrictionist immigration reform package. The Alabama House has already passed a similar bill.

The Senate bill contains all sorts of goodies: a State ban on the so-called DREAM Act, an Arizona-style immigration law, E-Verify, a provision that requires landlords to evict illegal aliens. It even bans the children of illegal aliens from participating in extracurricular activities at school!

Helen Rivas, a “civil rights advocate,” is horrified: “Lots of people will be instantly homeless because landlords who rent to illegals will become felons.”

Isn’t that the whole idea? Criminals who don’t belong here should get lost.

Allison Neal, legal director of the

It wasn’t about slavery

Union armies did not invade the South to eliminate slavery, or in the cause of abolition, or for the liberation of Black people, ideas not formally or even informally in the minds of the soldiers or their civilian instigators. They were out to put down a rebellion and restore the Union.

The great falsehood that the Union was fighting for a high moral cause, the elimination of chattel slavery for four million people torn from Africa, was a myth concocted later in the war when the war was going poorly for the North.

The Emancipation Proclamation, remember, wasn’t issued until the war was nearly two years old, and it was so far from being a declaration of moral principle that its creator acknowledged it was only a military ploy, unconstitutional and illegal, designed to encourage uprisings in the plantations and Black enlistment in the Union forces.

Nor was the Proclamation truly concerned with the welfare of the Black population, North or South. It had no provision for their economic and social integration into White society, no plan for their resettlement north or west, no concern whatever for their future (it even gave up an early idea to finance their emigration to a foreign colony), and no regard for the wrenching consequences, economic and psychological, for the people and society who would be forced to give them up.

It was, indeed, an expression of American racism as deep in the North as the South, that had merely a pragmatic and hardly a moral purpose.

The sooner all that becomes clear, it seems to me, the sooner we can get on with the Sesquicentennial commemorations without all the distortions and misunderstandings.

Maybe.

Ulysses S. Grant was a slaveholder all through the War of Northern Aggression, holding his wife Julia’s slaves and not freeing them until Missouri forced his hand and abolished slavery in 1865. When General Henry Halleck instructed Grant in 1863 to assist Adjutant General Lorenzo Thomas in enlisting freed slaves to avoid drafting White soldiers, “Grant said frankly: “I never was an abolitionist, nor even what could be called anti-slavery... [but] I do not feel that in my position I have a right to question any policy of the government.”

Jewish bullying topples Beck

By Rev. Ted Pike
truthtellers.org

Responding to accusations of anti-Semitism by over 600 Jewish rabbis, plus public Jewish demonstrations in New York, FOX News sacked Glenn Beck. Beck’s devoted “Israel-first” conservatism was not enough to save him from suspicion by organized liberal Jewry that he had a back-room agenda to begin discussing the taboo topic of overwhelming Jewish control in America and the world. Such is a “speech crime,” according to Jewish supremacist thought police, worthy of terminating a broadcaster’s career.

Beck’s supposed transgressions are trivial. In brief:

- He criticized Jewish billionaire George Soros as a puppet master of liberal, one-world objectives. (True.)
- He said reform (secular) Judaism is largely preoccupied with a political agenda, as is radical Islam. (True.)

- He described his political foes as “Nazis” creating a “Holocaust” of abortion. (The Anti-Defamation League and rabbis claim Jews have a virtual copyright on such language. It is now disrespectful, even anti-Semitic for a “goy” like Beck to use such terms without Jewish permission.)
- Most inflaming to Jews, Beck has exposed the Federal Reserve as a consortium of international bankers, including the Jewish Rothschilds, intent on controlling the world’s money system. (True.)

For this, Beck’s career at FOX no longer exists. What is to be done to curtail ever increasing Jewish power to defame and destroy reputations of leaders who present even the slightest threat to their power? How can we hold back Jewish supremacist bullying that makes fear of Jewish recrimination the dominant political and social consideration of our time?

As Jewish power in America becomes ever more strident, it is increasingly clear Christian/conservative leaders cannot deliver civilization. They are simply too vulnerable to vilification, boycott and financial ruin by Jewish media and “civil liberties” attack groups.

Our best bet politically is for millions of grassroots patriots to speak out more boldly than ever on the internet, talk radio, campus and discussion groups, etc., warning against Jewish power. Beck’s firing only confirms such unrestrained power exists and is intent on ending free speech in America.

More than just critics of Israel must speak out. Christians/conservatives and Tea Party members are increasingly the real target of Jewish supremacist venom. In the Jewish-owned Washington Post last month, Dana Milbank complained mostly of Beck’s anti-Obama/liberal conspiracy theories, not about substantial anti-Jewishness. These theories are shared by millions of concerned Christian/conservatives and Tea Party members. Being the authors of communism and liberalism, liberal Jews consider anti-communist Christian conservatism, with its pro-morality, pro-Constitution and free enterprise agenda, their mortal enemy.

Make no mistake, conservatives and Tea Partiers. The 600 rabbis and myriads of Jewish organizations that took down Beck are only using him as a stepping stone to silence their real enemy – you!

Alabama ACLU, said: “This is a serious threat to the Fourth Amendment rights of all Americans who might look and sound foreign.”

First they came for the illegal aliens. Then they came for the Muslim jihadists. Who knows? Maybe one day the mob will summon the will to come for the ACLU.

Andrew Turner, a lawyer for the SPLC, called the bill “an empty gesture of defiance.” He begs the question: just who rules this country?

Senator Roger Bedford (Scalawag-Russellville) attempted to exempt religious organizations like the Catholic Church from harboring illegal alien criminals.

“God does not decide if you are legal or illegal. He decides if you are saved or unsaved,” Bedford said.

Why can’t God make that decision in Mexico or California? Why would God care where you live anyway?

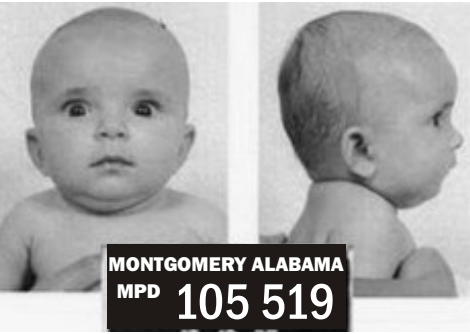

As in Georgia, the major difference between the House and Senate bills comes down to E-Verify. The House bill requires small businesses to use E-Verify. The Senate bill only requires that of businesses that contract with or get grants from the State.

Disorderly conduct outrage

The editor of this newspaper strolled too far off the reservation on February 19 in passing out copies of The First Freedom at the Jefferson Davis Inaugural festivities according to a goon squad of Montgomery, Alabama, police and swatskis. So they had to rough him up a bit, understandably, and then lock Childress away for seven hours in a 10x12-foot room bare to its concrete walls, denying him food, water, phone call or any place to sit except on that cold, wet floor. Nor would they return his billfold containing $450 in order to post the $300 demanded bond until satisfied he’d learned next time to get lost when told to do so by this progressive city’s finest.

The bloody truth about Jewish ritual murder

A review of the ritual murder of St. Andrei Youschinsky by Menachem Mendel Beiliss, and other grisly crimes

Here begins one of those reports that none but the mature – no, not prurient – reader can follow to its conclusion without knee-jerking.

By Mark Farrell
m.f@zoomtown.com

“A post-mortem examination revealed upon his body 47 wounds, all having evidently been inflicted with an awl or chisel-like instrument and with every indication of system, in order to draw the greatest amount of blood,” noted the report by the U. S. Consulate John Grant, reporting the findings of doctors during the trial of (Menachem) Mendel Beiliss. Beiliss had been arrested for murdering the child Andrei Youschinsky. Continuing, Grant wrote, “The wounds were mostly grouped around the head and neck ... while two entering the heart had evidently been given to quickly cause death.”

A picture of Andrei’s head taken after the grisly crime, with the blood washed away by police

It was the crime of the century – a crime so great that it sent shock waves not only across Russia, where it occurred, but the world itself. It began on March 25, 1911, when the young Gentile Andrei went missing in Kiev, which was a part of the Russian empire at the time. Several days later, Andrei’s parents’ worst fears were realized: His bloodied corpse was discovered in a dark cave.

The cave where Youschinsky’s corpse was discovered

Police investigators examined the corpse at the scene and noticed some strange facts: Despite the child being found dead in the cave, there was little blood there, certainly not explaining the child’s near total blood loss. The child’s shirt appeared to have been pulled up while being stabbed, with the blood pouring out somewhere else, helping to explain why there hadn’t been more blood on the shirt than there was. The wounds were in a bizarre pattern, not just in one area, but focused in three primary areas: The forehead, the back, and around the heart, with a few wounds scattered around the neck and some even under the armpit.

Youschinsky’s bloodied shirt

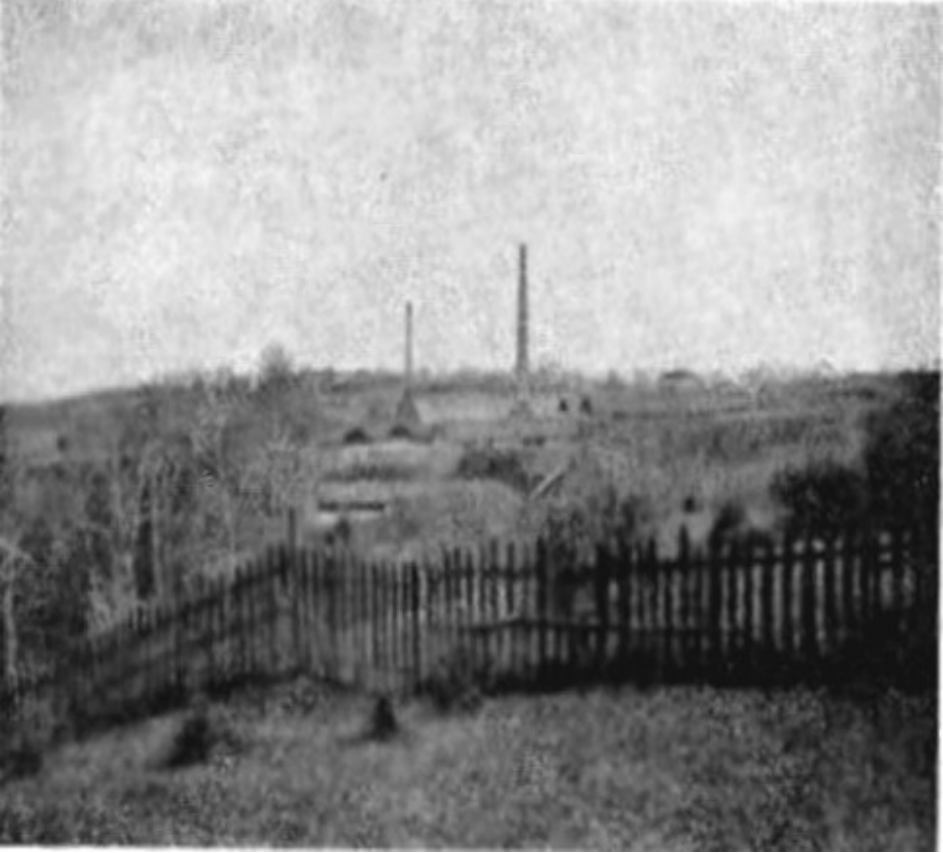

Other disturbing facts began to appear. Despite no cloths around Andrei, the coroner noticed that Andrei’s mouth had been wrapped with cloth so tight that his teeth left imprints on the inside of his lips. Also, it appeared that his limbs had been securely tied down too, with imprints of ropes left on his arms and legs. Some of the wounds on Andrei’s forehead appeared to have a methodical placement, as if the awl was held in place right on the temple in certain places then extreme force was applied to puncture his skull, explaining why some puncture marks seemed more pronounced and deeper than others.

Investigators looking further into this matter noticed that the boy had been dragged to the cave. Looking at the bent and broken brush around the area, while finding occasional drops of blood on the ground and on a nearby recently broken fence, the police discovered that the boy had been dragged from a nearby brick factory which was owned by a Jew, managed by a Jewish man (Beiliss), and employed only Jewish workers.

The Jewish Zaitsev Factory

Police quickly interviewed the boy’s playmates. It was discovered that Andrei had been playing with (Zhenya) Eugene Cheberiak, his sisters Valentina and Ludmilla, and another child, Kaliujny. The children told police that they had been playing with Andrei near the Jewish factory when some Jews came running after them. They said that one Jew, who had a beard and black hat, caught Andrei and took him away, while Eugene and Kaliujny ran off, frightened by the ordeal.

More strange and disturbing facts became evident to investigators as they continued clamored how he must be innocent, and that the case was nothing but mere anti-Semitism. They said because he was Jewish, he could not have committed a crime. A defense team that would have made O. J. Simpson envious was created, with the finest Jewish attorneys in Russia hired. It has been estimated that in today’s dollars, the equivalent of at least $115 million was raised for Beiliss’s defense.

The Procurator of the Supreme Appellate Court of Kiev, the rough equivalent of the prosecuting attorney, Chaplinsky, noted that the case was being solved:

“[W]e cannot avoid coming to the conclusion that Mendel Beiliss took part in the commission of the murder. . . . Under such circumstances, all the references to Mendel Beiliss contained in the testimonies . . . of witnesses, including the less substantial, acquire the significance of serious evidence against him.”¹ their search for the truth: Inside the factory, there was a secret synagogue. Investigators were planning to look at one area of the facility; and, the day before they planned to examine the area, it mysteriously caught fire and burnt down. After interviewing local townspeople, it was discovered that many ultra-orthodox Jews of the Lubavitcher sect – the kind who all have beards, wear black hats, and have long, curly sideburns – had recently congregated at the factory for unknown reasons. Beiliss was arrested, believed to have been involved in the crime. Eyewitnesses Eugene, Valentina, Ludmilla and Kaliujny identified Beiliss as Andrei’s abductor, with Eugene having stayed longer in hiding than the others.

The Cheberiaiks’ home

Jews of the world suddenly united to free Beiliss. The newspapers owned by Jews all

The facts certainly posed a problem to the Jewish defense team that was organized. It seemed like there was strong evidence against him. It seemed certain that Beiliss was involved in the murder, and he was one of a gang of fanatical Jewish cutthroats who were going to be found guilty of slaughtering young Andrei Youschinsky. The case was becoming well known throughout the world. People from all over were looking at this monstrous crime perpetrated by Jews. It was terrible publicity for Jews; for non-Jews from all lands would soon realize that a small band of fanatical Hasidic Jews were, once again, being accused of murdering non-Jews for sacrificial blood rites. Certainly, the Jewish defense team needed to take decisive action to hide some nefarious activities. With the fanatical crime in the press, various authors began to write about how similar crimes, committed by Jews, had occurred in the past.

Indeed, Jewish ritual murder was not something new, which had just been discovered, but is something that has been occurring since written history. There are many celebrated cases, such as Simon of Trent, who was made a Saint by the Catholic Church and whose case has been written about in detail in several issues of La Civiltà Cattolica. In fact, there are about a dozen children who were made saints by the Church. Additionally, there have been countless other children across the world in every land where Jews exist who were found to have been victims of these barbaric Jewish rituals, crimes recorded by various authors over the course of the past 2,000 years.

An old picture of St. Simon of Trent, demonstrating how he was similarly bound and poked with awls. Note the hammer, which was probably used for detailed piercings.

Many Jews were concerned about this darker side of their history, including all the mysticism and rituals along with it, being discovered by the general public. A large number of them, particularly those Jews who had donated millions of dollars for Beiliss’s defense, wanted the trial – and all information associated with it – to just disappear. Beiliss’s lawyers needed to develop a plan, lest these crimes throughout the ages be exposed to the general public.

It appears that an idea was hatched. It was a dastardly idea, but what seems to be the typically two-part ploy that usually accompanies a Jewish Ritual Murder that is uncovered: Get rid of the evidence against the Jews; accuse a non-Jew; and, of course, use the media to convince the public.

Lord Rothschild himself even got into the fray. He sent off a letter to Cardinal Merry Del Val of the Roman Catholic Church, beginning it with cries of innocence: “Probably Your Excellency is not unaware that in the city of Kiev in the Russian Empire, some ill disposed people have recently renewed the atrocious ritual murder libel against Israelites.” He asked for the Cardinal to verify the authenticity of a letter by Fr. Ganganelli, who later became Pope Clement XIV. While the Cardinal did verify the authenticity of the letter, he in no way attributed the meaning to the letter that Rothschild conveyed. (The letter simply said that Jews should not be punished for ritually murdering Christians without first having been tried for such accusations in court.)²

Due to the discord raised mostly by the Jewish press in England and in America, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs said, “With regret, we must take cognizance of a new encroachment upon our internal affairs on part of the English people, instigated by the Jews.”³ Indeed, Y. Bakhmeteff, the Russian Ambassador stationed in the United States, commented on the situation:

“The Jewish press in the United States is watching the Beiliss case with concentrated attention and, naturally, completely distorts all the news which comes from Russian sources. Though not regarding this fact as very serious, I would nevertheless consider to throw light on the court proceeding from our point of view, in the American press.”⁴

Strange things began to occur to the case. People started dying. Professor Obolonsky, who was scheduled to testify at the trial, suddenly died. Had Obolonsky been the only one to die, perhaps things would not have looked all that unusual. But more evidence and people started to disappear. The incredible events that took place between the murder of Youshchinsky in 1911 and the trial in 1913 seems so incredible that all people of the world should scream in harmony about the reported miscarriage of justice that was perpetrated.

The Jewish defense decided to blame Vera Cheberiak for young Andrei Youshchinsky’s death. Some Jews even offered her the equivalent of several million dollars today if she would say she was guilty, and provide her free defense, which she obviously refused. The Jews probably chose her because Vera’s son was the last one playing with Andrei. The Jews could not develop a greater ploy. Vera Cheberiak was a mere housewife. Her husband was a postal clerk. Neither had criminal records.

3. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 159.
4. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 160. Bakhmeteff later sent a message to Minister of Foreign Affairs in which he honestly said that American Jews “have not failed to take advantage of an opportunity and have used the Kiev case to foment a new agitation against Russia. . . .” This was done to elicit “sympathy” for the “oppressed Jews.” He went on to describe that Jewish Congressman Adolph Sabath of Chicago sought to condemn Russia for the Jews. Bakhmeteff then went on to describe “the falsity of the newspaper articles maliciously stating that we accuse the whole of Jewry of the commission of ritual murders.” He noticed that “public opinion” was being “misled” by “false information derived from evil-minded agitators.” Ibid., pp. 160-161.

This was a problem. But, as with all problems, there are solutions. Her brother had been in trouble with the law for theft. Sometimes, he would visit her and bring a friend with him. It was to be guilt by association. The Jews said that she was a vicious “leader of thieves.”⁵ Innocent Vera Cheberiak, housewife without a criminal record, was now portrayed as an iniquitous mastermind behind a den of thieves, who purportedly regularly attended her flat.

The proceedings against Beiliss were started. Eugene Cheberiak was scheduled to testify against Beiliss. He had been with his good friend Andrei Youshchinsky on the fateful day that Andrei was abducted and later murdered in cold blood. Eugene’s sisters, Valentina and Ludmilla, were also there when Andrei was abducted and were to testify. Another witness, Kazimir Shakhovsky, who was a lamplighter and who had been told by the children what had occurred, also offered to testify to recent events he had seen. The truth was going to come out. The Jews knew this. They also knew something had to be done about this problem.

Ivan Kozachenko, a secret agent for the investigators, had been strategically placed inside the cell of Mendel Beiliss, with the operation being so clandestine that not even the jailers or police knew of this initially. Apparently, while he was in jail with Beiliss, the latter told Secret Agent Kozachenko to poison “some lamp lighter” (Shakhovsky) and another witness, nicknamed “The Frog” (probably referring to the small size of the child Eugene and his slippery nature in which the child managed to escape, as he too had been grabbed but broke free). In an attempt to extract more information, Kozachenko said, “I told Beiliss that I would agree to do it.” Kozachenko continued:

“Mendel Beiliss said it was impossible to bribe ‘The Frog’ and ‘the lantern-lighter,’ so I was to settle them with the aid of strychnine. . . . Mendel told me that there was a hospital on the estate of Zaitzeff’s factory, where someone would get some strychnine to give it to me. Beiliss said that I would be given three or four hundred rubles for my expenses in executing this commission; and that if I succeeded in my mission, I would be given so much money that it would suffice for the rest of my life. This money would be given by the entire Jewish nation.”⁶

Beiliss in prison, surrounded by guards

Secret Agent Kozachenko, proceeding with his ruse of merely being a criminal in jail, reported Beiliss’s comments to the local police (also showing a note that Beiliss wrote his wife, saying that she should give Kozachenko whatever money he needs to execute the plan), and had an interview with Lieut.-Col. Ivanoff. Unknown to Kozachenko, Ivanoff was an investigator who was attempting to discredit any evidence that proved Beiliss’s guilt. Ivanoff did this for financial gain, for it was later discovered that he was being paid by the newspaper Kievlianin for his disinformation.⁷

On August 11, 1911, just a mere five days after the proceedings began against

5. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 89. Since Cheberiak had no criminal records, this problem also was remedied. While she was not a thief, her brother, Peter Singayevsky, was. He had given her some of his stolen goods. She sold these items, because she did not need them, and was promptly arrested. She was also convicted of forgery during the time between Youshchinsky’s murder and the trial. Ibid., p. 121.

Beiliss, Secret Agent Kozachenko’s findings proved to be true: Eugene Cheberiak died. But not only did Eugene die; his little sister, Valentina, died as well, who was to testify about Beiliss as well.⁸ Many Russian newspapers, undaunted over the deaths of the children, spoke what they felt was the truth about the incident. One newspaper reported:

“Eugene Cheberiak, the playmate of Andrei Youshchinsky, was poisoned and died in Kiev. . . . The elimination of important witnesses is the usual means employed by this bloodthirsty race [of Jews]. . . . Now there is a new victim in Kiev. The daughter of Cheberiak was poisoned. It is evident that the Jews decided to kill all those who might say a single word about the kidnapping of Andrei Youshchinsky by Beiliss. . . . Another most important witness has disappeared who could have given testimony in the case of Youshchinsky harmful to the interests of the Jews.”⁹

The Roman Catholic press reported in La Civiltà Cattolica what happened next:

“[T]wo of the children who were eye-witnesses, Eugene and Valentina, Cheberiak’s children, had died a few days after Beiliss’s imprisonment. There was a murmuring about poisoning, but the Jewish press resolutely denied: The children had been brought to the hospital where Dr. Cantor, a Jew, and Dr. Wissokowitch, a Jew, had verified it was just a matter of dysentery, as bacilli of it were found. But a little bit later – that is to say, after Cheberiak had refused to take upon herself the responsibility of the murder, and after she had made the deposition before the examining magistrate about the attempt at bribing subordination with an offering of 40,000 rubles – the newspapers themselves changed their opinion; and, with their usual impudence, they maintained that the bacteriological test had never been made, and that it could perfectly well be that the children had been poisoned . . . by their mother!”¹⁰

Indeed, Krasovsky, the Supervisor of the Kiev Police who reportedly had close relations with the synagogue, accused Vera Cheberiak – the innocent mother who had undergone the mental anguish of seeing her own children dying after agreeing to testify – of poisoning her own children.

Krasovsky, who was paid handsomely by Jews for his disinformation attempts

Vera could not fathom how she could be blamed for killing not only young Andrei Youshchinsky but her two children as well. When the Czar came to town, she sent him her “most humble” petition. She noted her “irreproachable life of toil.” She said, “I want to express before the throne the grief of a mother . . . when she . . . loses two of her children. . . .” She humbly requested that the Czar consider “the sufferings of the mother” and asked that he find the killers of her children.¹¹ Zamyslovsky, a

Sylvia Stolz released from prison

Report by Christian Bärthel

Translated by J. M. Damon

AFTER THREE YEARS and three months’ imprisonment in three different institutions for the crime of expressing proscribed political views, the so-called “Federal Republic of Germany” released Attorney Sylvia Stolz from Aichach Prison at 9:00 AM on Wednesday, 13 April 2011.

A large international group of free speech advocates, including supporters from France, Italy and Great Britain (Lady Michele Renouf) were present at the main gate to celebrate the release of our intrepid Sylvia.

We had expected her to come through the gate at 8:00 at the latest, but she was burdened with a huge amount of written materials – cardboard boxes filled with court documents, press reports and letters of support that she had accumulated over the years and carefully organized.

This delayed her release somewhat.

An exhausted Sylvia Stolz, center, is interviewed by Günter Deckert and Lady Michele Renouf.

Beginning about 8:30 I could observe activities in the control room through the window of the main entrance, and so I had the privilege of being the first to give her a friendly hug as she pushed open the door to great applause.

After her many friends had gathered round to hug her, shake her hand and present her with flowers and welcoming gifts, we loaded her belongings into a van and then we all went to a nearby inn where Günter Deckert had reserved the main room for our celebration.

There our “German Joan of Arc” related some details of her years in prison.

For example, she told us that she had been confined in the same cell in which Brigitte Mohnhaupt had been confined during her 24 years’ imprisonment.

Her enumerations of the countless minute, often absurdly complicated details, which are designed to completely control the prisoner’s daily routine, were particularly revealing.

She described the macabre pretexts her captors employed to keep her in particular from getting day passes and furloughs.

These are granted to common criminals but not political prisoners.

Even now Sylvia will be closely supervised by a special parole officer for years.

Her case is similar to that of Ernst Zündel, who on the occasion of his release from prison remarked during his welcoming party:

“What does freedom mean here?

“Freedom is just the outer camp of our prison nation!”

Sylvia said that her pleasure at being

Hail Sylvia Stolz!

By Robert Faurisson

A noble cause like that of historical revisionism needs a noble figure to embody it: Sylvia Stolz, whose surname in German means “proud,” is that figure.

There are revisionists of all origins, all characters, all tendencies, all beliefs. Some are made for research and others for action. Some concern themselves with strategy and tactics whilst others opt for the most candid and direct statements. Most of them consider that a revisionist out of prison is more useful to the cause than a revisionist in prison. I am not far from sharing that opinion; however, after some thought, I believe I need, as a proper revisionist, to look at or re-examine such an idea more closely. Without going so far as to claim that a revolution like the revisionist revolution needs martyrs – a preconception which, at bottom, is rather unseemly – I am bound to admit that the example of renunciation of one’s own freedom for the freedom of one’s fellow human beings is of a kind to inspire others to self-sacrifice, courage, ardor in battle.

We need the light brought to us by those released from prison is greatly dampened by the realization that the German nation remains still far from free...

During our celebrations in the large crowded room, numerous congratulatory messages were read.

I presented greetings from Udo Pastörs, head of the NPD (National Party of Germany) in the State parliament of Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, expressing who, fighting for the revisionist cause, have ended up in prison for having faced that danger in full knowledge of it. I speak here of those who have never yielded, never given assurances to the enemy, never conceded anything either in prison or in court. There are cases – very rare ones – where people land themselves in prison through sheer rashness, foolishness, exaggerated self-esteem, although they may end up, once their case comes to court, giving in, lowering the flag and, in their defense, making hackneyed speeches on the “freedom of expression.”

We need real men and real women. I shall not mention names here, lest I overlook any. Nevertheless I shall make an exception for Sylvia Stolz, “The German Joan of Arc,” as we readily call her.

Go and see up close what she has dared to say and do in this Germany abominably subjected to the law of the conqueror: you will learn to what heights a woman may rise, a woman who, like the legendary heroines in France, Germany and a good many other lands, lights up our meager existences.

There remains one wish for me to make: that this young woman will have the strength to go on being the model of heroic humanity that she embodies today for so many amongst us.

Ernst Zündel, on the day of his release after five years in the German ZOG’s gulag for expressing unapproved thoughts, accepts from likewise thought criminal ex-con author Günter Deckert a copy of Deckert’s book on the Satanic Holoquisition trials. Sylvia, Ernst’s counsel, was sentenced to 3½ years for defending her client too vigorously. Today Jews still control the mediacracy and their puppets, but tomorrow’s free governments will ostracize them.

deep gratitude for the efforts of Sylvia and Horst Mahler in the struggle for freedom of opinion in Germany.

The message also stressed the efforts of Pastör’s party to abolish the “muzzle clause” of Paragraph 130 of the Criminal Code, which the government uses to stifle dissent.

I was surprised at how fascinated Sylvia was with the little things that had been denied her for years – things the ordinary person takes for granted.

For example, she remarked on how strongly it affected her to look out the large window of the inn and observe such a wide panorama...

She made the revealing observation that she felt as though something of the strength and solidity of those surrounding prison walls had entered her very soul, and this made her grateful for her experiences during the long years in prison.

Sylvia is indeed a fascinating woman.

She promised to visit several persons who live in the area and also that she would not tarry in helping the German people regain its freedom in practical ways.

This is Sylvia’s mission in life, a duty to assist Germany and all mankind; it is more vital to her than food and drink.

She did in fact allow her food to grow cold.

No one could fail to notice that her heart beats only for Germany’s future!

Here’s freedom to him who would speak,
Here’s freedom to him who would write;
For there’s none ever feared that the truth
should be heard,
Save him whom the truth would indict!

Media distort truth to propagandize for war on Syria

Just like with Libya, a civil war fought between a desperate regime and a western-backed force of Islamic militants is misrepresented as genocide of “pro-democracy” protesters to lay the groundwork for another contrived “humanitarian” war.

By Paul Joseph Watson

prisonplanet.com

Despite the fact that western media are completely cut off from entering Syria and therefore remain unable to verify reports of hundreds of murders carried out by security forces loyal to Syrian president Bashar al-Assad, grainy and often misconstrued YouTube videos have been cited as proof positive that Assad is overseeing a brutal crackdown on pro-democracy protesters, but a whistleblower living in Syria has contacted us to express his disbelief at such claims, dismissing them as little more than fabricated fairy-tales designed to lay the groundwork for yet another NATO-backed military intervention based on contrived “humanitarian” grounds.

Although there is no doubt whatsoever that Syrians are being targeted by Assad’s security forces, their characterization by the western media as being “pro-democracy protesters” is beginning to bear remarkable resemblance to how Libyan militants, aided by Al-Qaeda terrorists, were portrayed as “innocent protesters” by the global establishment media even as they were commandeering tanks, flying fighter jets and carrying rocket-propelled grenades.

Despite a vacuum of reliable information emerging out of the country, corporate media outlets, while in one breath conceding that accounts by dubious human rights organizations are not verifiable, have nevertheless blamed Assad for the massacres of hundreds of innocent people.

The evidence indicates that such atrocities are being wildly exaggerated, just as they were before the air strikes were launched on Libya. For instance, a clip used by numerous western media outlets to depict Syrians being beaten to death by Assad’s security forces turned out to be a video of Iraqis from the 1990s.

In addition, Joshua Landis, Director of the Center for Middle East Studies and Associate Professor at the University of Oklahoma, documents how AFP,* the

*Agence France Press, not American Free Press

Guardian and other media outlets completely misconstrued a video that purported to show Syrian soldiers being shot by Assad’s security forces as a punishment for refusing to gun down protesters.

“The video does not ‘support’ the story that the Guardian says it does,” writes Landis. “The soldier denies that he was ordered to fire on people. Instead, he says he was on his way to Banyas to enforce security. He does not say that he was shot at by government agents or soldiers. In fact he denies it. The interviewer tries to put words in his mouth but the soldier clearly denies the story that the interviewer is trying to make him confess to. In the video, the wounded soldier is surrounded by people who are trying to get him to say that he was shot by a military officer. The soldier says clearly, “They [our superiors] told us, ‘Shoot at them if they shoot at you.””

Landis also highlights how a document purporting to be an order for Syrian intelligence agents to shoot on army officers and security agents in order to “deceive the enemy” is “clearly a fake.”

“What army, after all, would survive even days if its top officers were publishing orders to shoot its own officers?” asks Landis.

Further evidence of outside intervention comes in the form of reports that snipers are shooting at both protesters and Syrian security forces from rooftops. Iran’s Al-Alam News Network claims that the men, working on behalf of Saudi and U. S. intelligence agencies, are killing protesters in order to radicalize them and fan the flames of unrest.

leader of the Imperial Duma, honestly stated during trial that there was not “the slightest evidence against Cheberiak as the person who poisoned her children.”¹² During court, the State Procurator Vipper, promulgated:

“We have heard here Mr. Krasovsky himself spread insinuations that Vera Cheberiak poisoned her own children – she, who was so grieved when her son and daughter died and who undoubtedly loved her children very much. . . . The attempt has been made to throw the entire guilt upon Cheberiak. . . .”¹³

Prosecutor O. Vipper

Polistshuk, a witness to Beiliss’s guilt who had been an agent of the Secret Police, promulgated that Krasovsky was actually responsible for the children’s deaths by poisoning them, which was noted at the trial.¹⁴ In fact, both Cheberiak’s family and Polistshuk had witnessed and testified that young Eugene and Valentina Cheberiak ate a piece of cake given to them by Krasovsky before they died.¹⁵ Indeed, why would he come to Cheberiak’s flat with cake in hand? Not too surprisingly, since Krasovsky was the supervisor of the Kiev Police, his Police Department issued a response that favored him to Petersburg. Not surprisingly, Lieut.-Col. Ivanoff, who was on the Jewish payroll, was involved in the writing of this letter.

Beiliss during the trial

Indeed, Ivanoff was getting paid off with much money from the Jewish-owned newspaper Kievlianin for supplying quasi-facts, which promoted the belief that Cheberiak was a ruthless murderer and the notorious leader of a den of thieves in its articles. As a result of his lies, Ivanoff was then involved in a trial where the Kievlianin was sued for libel, based on Ivanoff’s disinformation, and found guilty as charged.¹⁶ It was also shown that Ivanoff “lied” at the trial by deliberately making up false testimony of Kozachenko to make Kozachenko’s testimony appear circumspect. Accordingly, Ivanoff was “charged” with “dishonesty in the open court room.”¹⁷

Apparently, Shakhovsky, the lamplighter who had witnessed young Andrei near

Beiliss shortly before Andrei’s murder, and his fears of being “stabbed” or murdered by other means were not mere paranoia. He obviously heard of the children being killed, and must have known that he had little chance if the band of cutthroats would murder even children witnesses. Then again, what would one expect from a group of people who stab a child 47 times with an awl and drain his blood? That must have scared Shakhovsky a bit. He changed his statement. Now, he stated that he did not actually see Beiliss abduct the Youshchinsky child; he stated that Eugene Cheberiak, who had since died, told him that he saw a man, who was wearing Jewish attire and who resembled Beiliss, grab Andrei, and the Jew dragged Andrei towards the brick factory. His wife also dropped her testimony, probably out of the fear of being just another murder statistic in this case. She said that she was under the influence of alcohol when she made her statements.¹⁸

The slanderous campaign against Cheberiak continued. Cheberiak was referred to by a Jewish writer as a “keeper of the den of murderers.”¹⁹ Since the Jewish defense team was unsuccessful in framing her for the death of her own children and Andrei, they tried to blame her children’s murder on her brother, Peter Singayevsky, and his friends. The Jewish defense team figured that this would be easier, since Singayevsky and his friends had been arrested before for theft, while Vera’s record was clean. Inventing names to make these common thieves sound more sinister, the Jewish investigator Fenenko, working in conjunction with Ivanoff, referred to two of Vera Cheberiak’s brother’s friends as “Vanka the Red Haired” (Ivan Latysheff) and “Kolka the Sailor” (Nicholas Mandzelevsky).²⁰

Latysheff supposedly committed suicide while Fenenko was questioning him. It is said that Latysheff just got up and bolted for the fourth story window and decided to jump out.²¹ However, this story about Latysheff committing suicide just does not make any sense. Why would he kill himself at that point? Now, the Jewish defense team could bash Latysheff as much as they wanted, suggesting that he somehow was responsible for the macabre incident surrounding the innocent child Youshchinsky; and Latysheff could not defend his honor (nor retaliate with libel and slander suits).²² They had found their scapegoat.

Two of the star witnesses mysteriously vanished off the face of the Russian map at the time of the trial. Secret Agent Kozachenko and the criminal Kulinich, both of whom had told investigators of Beiliss’s confessions while in jail with him, just disappeared into thin air. The prosecutor “was not able” to find either of them. Prosecutor Vipper remarked that Kulinich was needed to “confirm the fact that the accused [Beiliss], being confined in the prison together with the witness, proven that the children died as a result of the cake that Krasovsky had given them), Krasovsky was removed from police in 1912. He quickly obtained a job for the Jewish journalist Brazul-Brushkovsky. This is the same gentleman who was also paying Ivanoff for information to discredit the investigation and make Beiliss appear innocent. Krasovsky continued to investigate the matter, which was now being paid for by the newspaper. Ibid., p. 133. Director of the Police Department, Bielezky, received a telegram that gave evidence that Ivanoff had an assistant, Sergei Makhalin, who worked for the journalist Brazul-Brushkovsky and was involved in the libel for which Ivanoff was convicted. It appears that Makhalin gave more false information at the trial. Ibid., pp. 195-197. 18. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, pp. 80-81. 19. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 181. 20. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 114-115. 21. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 118. 22. In fact, it was demonstrated that while Rudzinsky and Singayevsky, common thieves and friends of Latysheff (and the latter, Singayevsky, being Vera Cheberiak’s brother), were engaged in a burglary with Latysheff, they all thought the murder of Youshchinsky took place, because they had heard an erroneous date of when Youshchinsky was murdered at the funeral. Both Singayevsky and Rudzinsky responded to investigators that this proved their innocence and that of their friends because of their criminal activity, giving the same wrong date. Had they actually somehow been involved in the crime, they would have confessed to him that he had participated in Youshchinsky’s murder.”²³ It is not known if they ever turned up; if they did turn up, it may have been in a grave, perhaps suffering the same fate as so many others who planned to testify against Beiliss. Or, maybe, they decided to take some money and live the leisure life. Their testimony, which was needed, was nowhere to be found.

Despite all the mysterious deaths and disappearances surrounding Vera Cheberiak – the deaths of her two children, Eugene and Valentina; the murder of her child’s friend, Andrei Youshchinsky; the supposed suicide of her brother’s friend, Latysheff; the untimely death of the investigating Professor Obolonsky; the disappearance of two witnesses who had heard Beiliss confess his guilt, Secret Agent Kozachenko and the criminal Kulinich, both planning to testify – the good Vera Cheberiak, undaunted by the tragic events surrounding this murder, continued forward and testified at the trial. She told the defense that her son Eugene had personally seen Beiliss grab the innocent child Youshchinsky and took him away, and that Eugene had told her this.²⁴ Such bravery in the face of adversity must be admired. This is, perhaps, why Prosecutor Chaplinsky referred to her as “an innocent Orthodox Christian woman.”²⁵ Her daughter Valentina also testified, undaunted by her brother and sister’s deaths.

The Jewish defense team sought to use every bit of subterfuge it could create. They used every means at their disposal to make it appear as if the whole purpose of the trial was to frame an innocent Jew. Prosecutor Vipper calmly stated at the Beiliss trial at how Jews reacted to Beiliss being indicted:

“From the first moment when Beiliss was indicted, Jewish circles became excited. They did not expect that the government... would dare to accuse the Jews. I repeat: They did not expect this. . . .

“The Jews are so sure of having in their known the date on which it occurred and used that specific date as their alibi to demonstrate innocence. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 116-117. Hence, their mistake shows their innocence in this matter and raises more suspicions of Latysheff’s alleged suicide, which seems more like the possibility of another murder perpetrated against a person whose innocence would have made it more evident that the head of the guilty party was, in fact, Beiliss. Indeed, Prosecutor Vipper noted that Rudzinsky, Singayevsky and Latysheff were not guilty. “The government does not desire to conceal anything, and it would indict them if they were guilty.” Ibid., p. 185. Fenenko, an investigator who was shown to be pursuing false leads, was replaced from the case, Ibid. pp. 130, 146. Probably due to the lack of details he kept in relation to Cheberiak’s testimony, it caused some confusion on the part of investigator Shmakoff later. Ibid., p. 183. Speaking out on the behalf of Singayevsky, Rudzinsky and Latysheff, Prosecutor Vipper queried the jury: “Does a thief, a criminal, a rascal, subject children to such barbarities? They may commit a murder, a wretched murder. . . . But they never apply such refined, bestial tortures. So, gentlemen of the jury, notwithstanding all the gossip about them, you must remember, you must bear in mind . . . that Singayevsky, Rudzinsky and Latysheff are not guilty, that the blood of Andrei is not on their hands, and that this blood is on other hands.” Ibid., p. 185. 23. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 131. 24. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 139. 25. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 182.

hands the main lever of social life, the press, that they think nobody would dare to raise such an accusation against them, not only in Russia but also in other nations. . . . They control our world . . . and we feel ourselves under their yoke. . . I personally consider myself under the power of the Jews; under the power of Jewish thought; under the power of the Jewish press... The Russian press only seems to be Russian. . . .

“To speak against Jews means to evoke a charge that you are either a Black Hundred, an obscurantist, or a reactionary, or that you do not believe in progress, and so on. Nobody thought that the government would ever try this case. Everyone wondered whether the government would not be taking a risk. . . . We will be accused even of having staged the trial, of wishing to incite the people against the Jews. . . .

“There was, therefore, great astonishment on the part of the Jews when Beiliss was indicted: How could the government dare to do such a thing when there is an Imperial Duma, in which various discussions will be started and a number of government officials may be held responsible for this? The government, however, dared. And Beiliss was indicted.”²⁶

When Rev. Dr. Justin Pranaitis testified, the Jewish defense made up all kinds of lies to discredit him. He testified to ritual murders having occurred in the past, and explained the hatred contained towards Gentiles in the Jewish oral laws, known as the Talmud. In order to hide the facts, they made it appear as if all the Popes condemned Jewish ritual murder accusations, while nothing could be further from the truth, particularly considering all the child-saints such as St. Simon of Trent, who had died a similar death.²⁷ The Jewish defense team tried to ridicule him with a play on words to make it appear as if he was unfamiliar with the Talmud, asking him, “Kto Baba Kama?” (“Who is Grandmother Kama?”) The defense lawyers were referring to one of the books of the Talmud, named Baba Kama, but presented the question in such a manner (rather than asking him, “What is Baba Kama?”) as to obviously confuse him, with all the Jews laughing about his initial response to their trick-question in an effort to ridicule him.

Rev. Dr. Justin Pranaitis

The jury at the trial

No article can ever do the trial justice. And, unfortunately, all books in English about the trial are written by Jews, who were quite ingenious with the way that they presented (or omitted) many of the key facts when you take them together.

Zamyslovsky, the prosecuting attorney in the case and member of the Russian Duma, wrote a massive book about the ordeal, published prior to the Russian Revolution in 1917. It was titled Ubistvo

27. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 209. In fact, Lord Rothschild, an incredibly wealthy English Jew who came to Beiliss’s aid, “requested confirmation of the fact that the Roman Pontiffs always denied the existence of ritual murders.” In response to this, the Cardinal commented on the ritual murder charge, saying that “the press obviously put a strained interpretation upon the documents in question.” He continued, “It is one thing to forbid a ritual murder charge against the Jews without sufficient evidence; it is another thing to deny that Christians had at any time been killed or even tortured by Jews. This the Church cannot easily deny.” Ibid., pp. 267-268. This corroborates Rev. Dr. Pranaitis’s findings that such a document never existed.

DRUGS: the scourge of our youth

By Samuel Bender

I made an important choice to live a more pure lifestyle. Though not perfect, I strive to have a moral, value-driven life. Lack of morals and values prevents many noble youths from becoming those men the Nationalist Movement needs. The spread of morally-offensive subject matter by the leftist media has many falling into stereotypes they promote, such as drug-use.

I feel that the number one downfall for many is the use and sale of illegal drugs. Whoever supports a drug habit supports also those anti-White forces that grow, manufacture and traffic it across our border.

The Nanny State can’t last much longer

One sane voice in Washington...

By Ron Paul
Infowars.com

LAST MONTH, Congress and the administration refused to seriously consider the problem of government spending. Despite the fear-mongering, a government shutdown would not have been as bad as claimed.

It is encouraging that some in Washington are insisting on reduced spending, which is definitely a step in the right direction, but only one step.

We have miles to go before we can even come close to a solution, and it will involve completely redefining the role of government in our lives and on the world stage. A compromise was struck at the last minute, but until Democrats agree to rein in entitlement spending, and Republicans back off the blank checks to the military industrial complex, it all amounts to political gamesmanship.

Unfortunately, the compromises always seem to be just the opposite. Instead of the left agreeing to cut social spending and the right agreeing to cut military spending, the right agrees to more welfare and the left agrees to more warfare. In spite of all the rhetoric, we will go deeper in debt, the Fed laden weed south of that border eagerly ships it to our White neighborhoods. Though marijuana is a relatively harmless drug, it can be a “stepping stone” to harder stuff. Most White kids caught with heroin will say they smoked pot first.

And it is these hard drugs or the selling of any drugs that destroys our children! “Pedro” then most likely recruits gang members like MS-13 to mule his dope across the border, taking many more illegals with him along the same trade route, further worsening the problem. So, not only do we get more drugs in our country, but more Mexicans and more powerful Mexican gangs. And “Jihad Muhammad,” who also hates Americans, grows opium to produce heroin, and the money earned goes to purchase weapons for organizations that plan our demise. He, like Pedro, also seeks to weaken our youth in his war against the White race.

This Islamic threat has also caught the ears of many Africans living in America who admire Islam’s hatred for White folk while at the same time allowing complete domination of woman, something close to their hearts. Many of these Africans feel disenfranchised though they themselves will print more money, and the value of the dollar will continue to plummet. How long will it be before foreigners stop buying our debt, and hyperinflation arrives? Throughout history, empires have always overextended themselves through conquests and wealth transfers leading to eventual collapse, from the Roman Empire to the Soviet Union. We are headed in the same direction and it seems only the chaos of the collapse of the dollar will stop the spending spree. Arguing over funding for Planned Parenthood and NPR, though important, only shows that leadership in Washington either won’t face reality, or don’t understand how serious the problem is.

Of course, an actual government collapse would create serious problems for many people who have come to depend on government payments for healthcare, retirement income, their children’s education, and even food and housing. However, these so-called entitlement were never slaves, but choose to live on welfare nonetheless. Many otherwise good, young White men find out exactly who these White-hating Africans are when they end up in prison for selling drugs. It is these same Africans that seek to rape them in prison, sometimes in concert with others. Prison rape is a Black-on-White or Brown-on-White thing, never the reverse.

White females exposed to constant inter-racial coupling on MTV and other Jewish-controlled networks are vulnerable to exploitation as well. Many are brainwashed by hip hop culture and its propaganda.

These Africans are not just happy to receive our tax dollars; their greatest thrill is getting a White woman pregnant. The drugs they sell not only ruin our children’s lives, but sustain theirs. Why support our enemies? Why allow the Jewish media to teach that moral decay and racial genocide are “tolerance?” It is time that we open our eyes! The drug trade embodies the same programs are unconstitutional to begin with and have engendered a culture of dependence on wealth transfer payments that is out of control. It concerns me greatly that instead of dealing seriously with our situation, so many in Washington would rather allow the chaos that will ensue when all of the dependent people are suddenly cut off. Better to look reality squarely in the face and tell people the difficult truth that government is simply not capable of managing people’s lives from cradle to grave as was foolishly promised. We face trillions in deficits with any of the budgets under consideration.

Keeping those promises is, sadly, just not one of our options in the long run. Better to admit the Nanny State is coming to an end and we are no longer working on “compromises” but a transition – to a sustainable way of life, one that respects the constitution, the rule of law and property rights.

All good things must end

By Gregory Kay

Several people have been asking, both of The First Freedom and me personally, when the latest book in The Third Revolution Saga was to be released. I’m happily announcing The Warlord is now available not only as the latest but last of that series.

For those who don’t know, this four-volume fictional Southern Nationalist series follows the lives of two people, a police officer and a reporter caught up in the near-future outbreak of a second War for Southern Independence centered around Columbia, South Carolina. These four books – The Third Revolution, The Long Knives, The Black Flag and my latest, The Warlord – are designed to make people think as they follow the conflict from inception to its aftermath. Often brutal, this story forces the reader to face some uncomfortable political, racial and organizational truths, and reflects traditional Southern attitudes on all these things; thus, depending on the reader’s point of view, it is both widely praised and roundly cursed. At least no one has reported feeling indifferent about it.

Beginning the series in 1999 with what was intended to be a single book, after the story assumed a mind of its own I ended up writing four instead, with this last 673-page installment released, appropriately, I think, in the same month as those first shots of the second American Revolution of 1861 were fired.

Many of you have asked me to continue the series, but all good things must come to an end, preferably while they’re still good. This book should tie everything up nicely in what will hopefully prove to be a satisfying package. And, besides, I’ve lived with these characters night and day for twelve years now, having come to love them despite putting them through hell, and they and I both deserve a little break.

This doesn’t mean I’m going to stop writing; in fact, I should have at least one and possibly two or more unrelated books coming out in the next year or so. Some are Southern and/or racially-oriented, others not, but all of them are White literature involving White main characters, written by a White author and intended for White readers. I would like to thank you all for reading my products.

I no longer keep a stock of books on hand, so the easiest way to get them is directly from Amazon.com or by visiting <http://www.lulu.com/gregmkay>, where all are available either in 6x9 softcover or a much more economical $3.99 download form. If you have any questions about the series, please don’t hesitate to contact me at gregmkay@yahoo.com.

tyranny that we so despise! I see many who claim to be racially aware yet continue to fund the enemy through the drug trade.

It is time for us to reform ourselves and shed this foreign scourge of drug use. Whites who live in minority neighborhoods are far more likely to use drugs and listen to rap. To call yourself a Nationalist is to call yourself a Noble Man. So step up to the plate and be an example to our children; combat all foreign influence starting with the drug culture. Drugs destroy our White youth! Drugs destroy our White race!

Andrushee Youschinskago (The Murder of Andrei Youshchinsky). In it, he reportedly tries to change “the public opinion of the world” to show it that the Czarist government was not as bad as some Jews portrayed it to be. Zamyslovsky stated:

“The fanatical murder committed by the Jews in order to obtain Christian blood is not a legend even in the twentieth century. It is not blood libel; it is a terrible reality. Many who doubted and hesitated about it became convinced after the Kiev trial. However, the historical and social significance of the Beiliss affair is far from having been exhausted by these discoveries of the bloody rite and dogma that were repeatedly described aloud in public, in the name of the State prosecutor, at the trial in Kiev. . . . The Beiliss case is a vivid and indelible page from that book of the world’s history, which contends that Jewry immediately opens war against the Christian State system everywhere as soon as it has succeeded in strengthening itself, and it does not shrink from using any means at its disposal.”²⁸

Just about everyone associated with the trial who testified for the prosecution – who didn’t die during the trial – was murdered following the Russian revolution. Dr. Arnold Leese, writing in his book about Jewish Ritual Murder, notes what occurred:

“After the Jewish Bolshevik revolution, the Jew-controlled Cheka shot the Judge [Boldirev], the Public Prosecutor and many of the witnesses, including Father Pranaitis, the medical expert Kozoratov

28. Tager, The Decay of Czarism, p. 225.

Prosecutor G. G. Zamyslovsky and Professor Sikorski.

“Professor Pawlow, a Jew, who was a witness for the defense, became a leading scientist in Bolshevik Russia!”

The ex-General Alexandre Netchvoldov of the Russian Imperial Army tells us the rest in an article, “La Russie et les Juifs” in Le Front Unique, published at Oran, 1927, p. 59: Quoting Evrijskaja Tribuna of 24th August, 1922, he says that “at a visit of the Rabbi of Moscow to Lenin [Ulyanov], the first word Lenin said to his visitor was to ask him if the Jews were satisfied with the Soviet tribunal which had annulled the Beiliss verdict, saying that Youschinsky had been killed by a Christian!”

In the online English-Hebrew translation of Menachem Mendel Beiliss’s book The Story of My Sufferings, it also gives a picture of the aftermath, noted by the translator in the chapter Editor’s Postnotes:

“After the Revolution of 1917, the Provisional Russian Government immediately set about the task of prosecuting former Czarist ministers for crimes against the Russian people. The Beiliss case was the first case submitted for investigation. In the summer of 1919, although the archives of the Czar had not yet been researched and the commission was only allowed to investigate illegal acts done in an official capacity, the Moscow Revolutionary Tribunal convicted Minister of Justice Shtchedlovitoff, Ministers of the Interior Makaroff and Maklakoff and Director of Police Bielezky. They were all executed. Zamislovsky and Shmakoff died in the interim. Prosecutor Viper had died awaiting trial following his indictment in 1919. Vera Cheberiak was shot in Kiev in 1918.”

As noted above, it was the first case after the Russian Revolution. It should also be pointed out that the revolution occurred immediately after Zamyslovsky’s book was published. It is quite possible that if Zamyslovsky’s book been published and allowed to run its course, perhaps Russia would have had a fighting chance to recognize the hatred with which the Russian people would face. It has been estimated that between 40-60 million Russians were either slaughtered or starved after the Bolshevik Revolution.

V. V. Rozanov, who is still a respected poet in Russia, was also killed. He had written a book, The Relation of Jews to Blood, with nearly all copies having been rounded up and destroyed. (My copy is actually a reprint, published in 1934 Stockholm.)

In the work of Vladimir Lenin (a.k.a. Ulyanov), Critical Marks of the National Question, V. 20, p. 19, published in 1913, he writes about this case in a footnote:

“The Beilis case – a provocative trial engineered by the tsarist government in 1913 in Kiev. Beilis, a Jew, was falsely accused of having murdered a Christian boy named Yushchinsky for ritual purposes (actually, the murder was organised by the Black Hundreds). The aim of this frame-up was to fan anti-Semitism and incite pogroms so as to divert the masses from the mounting revolutionary movement. The trial excited great public feeling. Workers’ protest demonstrations were held in a number of cities. Beilis was acquitted.”

Shmakoff, a prosecuting attorney, who was murdered after the Russian Revolution

The Russian Holy Synod began collecting donations for a monument to be dedicated to the young Andrei Youshchinsky, who was “cruelly killed by the Jews.”²⁹ The child has now become a saint, recognized by some members of the Russian Orthodox Church, and there has recently been a new book published about the case in Kiev, Ukraine.

EDITOR’S NOTE

Survival is paramount, right? Then let us pray for the Jew as a first order of business though he may detest that concern for his welfare. Why should we care about him? In control of the worldwide media just now, a power that’s slowly returning to White men, at this stage he’s dangerous not only to himself but us. Our honor will not allow wishing any other race ill, thus we favor them all by example alone.

Campaign contributions rise when investigation begins

So what else is new?

By Matt Taibbi
rollingstone.com

A hilarious report has come out courtesy of the National Institute of Money in State Politics, showing that Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller – who is coordinating the investigation into the banks’ improper mortgage dealings – increased his campaign contributions from the finance sector this year by a factor of 88! He has raised $261,445 from finance, insurance and real estate contributors since announcing that he was coordinating the investigation into improper foreclosure practices. That is, 88 times as much as they gave him not over last year but over the previous decade.

Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller (the one with glasses) increased his campaign contributions from the finance sector this year by a factor of 88!

This foreclosure issue is about as perfect an example of how American politics works as you’ll ever see, a monstrous story that is somehow escaping national headlines. Essentially, all of the largest banks in the country have been engaged in an ongoing fraud and tax evasion scheme that among other things has resulted in many hundreds of billions in investor losses, and hundreds of thousands of improper foreclosures. In a single week last month, the 14 largest mortgage lenders – a group that includes bailout all-stars like Citigroup, Bank of America and Wells Fargo – managed to negotiate a settlement with the federal government that will mandate some financial relief to homeowners who have been victims of improper foreclosure practices. It’s unclear yet exactly what damages and fines will be involved in the federal settlement, or how many homeowners will be affected. But certainly there are some who believe the federal settlement was a political end-run around the States’ efforts to extract their own deal from the banks.

Put it this way. If the banks had to pay what they actually owed – from the registration taxes/fees they avoided by using the electronic registry system MERS to the money taken from investors in toxic mortgage-backed securities to the fees and payments stolen from homeowners via predatory loan practices and illegal foreclosures – they would probably all go out of business. That’s how much money is at stake here: the very future of financial giants like Bank of America and Citi and J. P. Morgan Chase is hanging to a very significant degree on the decisions of politicians like Miller.

Hence the sudden avalanche of money coming Miller’s way.

Seattle Times explains how to nullify: “Just do it!”

By Michael Maharrey
tenthamentcenter.com

Racist!
Neo-confederate!
Secessionist!
I’m waiting for the invectives to fly at Seattle Times editorial board members. Why? You might ask.

Well, the Times published an editorial advocating State nullification of an unconstitutional federal act. You know – nullification – that “dusty relic from the past, concocted by Southern States to protect slavery.”

The writers didn’t actually use the word “nullification.” But that’s precisely what they suggest when they advise Washington State Gov. Chris Gregoire to, “Just sign it!”

What exactly do the Times editorial writers want the governor to sign?

A medical marijuana bill that would create a regulatory system for Washington’s medicinal cannabis program and provide some arrest protections for patients. House amendments to the bill passed the Washington Senate 27-21 last month, sending the legislation to the governor’s desk for a signature.

If Gregoire signs the bill, Washington would stand in direct violation of federal law. Americans cannot legally grow or possess marijuana, even for medical use – even if State law says otherwise.

The Times demands the governor sign the bill anyway.

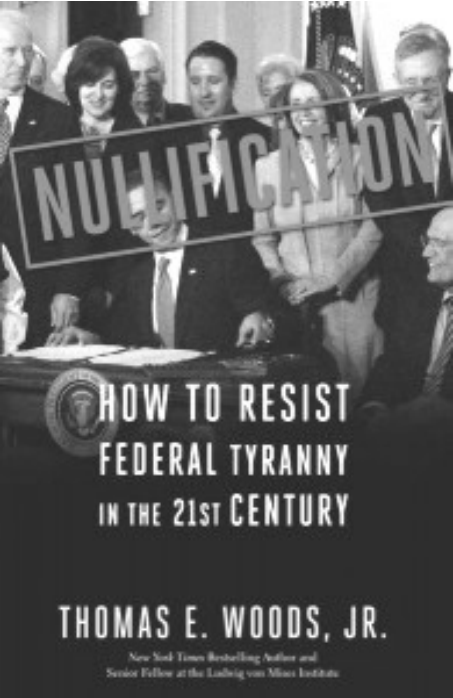

Nullification – when States take it upon themselves to invalidate, void or otherwise ignore unconstitutional federal acts. Thomas Jefferson called it the “rightful remedy.” James Madison said States “have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose.”

But Gregoire expressed reservations.

“I will review the bill to determine any parts that can assist patients in need without putting State employees at risk,” she said in a statement. “No State employee should have to break federal law in order to do their job.”

You see, the governor did what any “good” State official does. She sought permission from big brother in D. C. by asking Attorney General Eric Holder if she should sign the bill.

Of course, he said, “No,” emphasizing that marijuana is forbidden and federal agents have the power to arrest growers and dispensary operators. Even public employees who treat them as legitimate businesses “would not be immune from liability.”

That doesn’t faze the nullifiers at the Seattle Times.

“Bad idea,” the editorial writers said of Gregoire querying Holder. “She should have just done it.”

The paper seems to think the feds won’t act against the State or its employees. The editorial writers make a pretty good case:

“The local chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union said New Mexico has had State-licensed dispensaries since early 2009, and ‘the feds have not gone after any State employee there.’ Nor, said the ACLU, have federal agents cracked down on dispensaries in the other States that license them: Rhode Island, New Jersey, Maine, Colorado and Arizona...

“Just sign the bill.”

Before you read this article, see on page 5, “Jewish bullying topples Beck.” The below announcement preceded that interview, following which, the fatal topic is discussed.

Glenn Beck will plug The Creature from Jekyll Island

By G. Edward Griffin

On Friday, March 25, 2011, the entire Glenn Beck show will be devoted to an exposé of the Federal Reserve. I was invited to be a guest on the program and, when it was taped last Tuesday, I was amazed to find that Beck not only has read the book but praised it highly. In fact, almost his entire opening monologue was based on the information and, in some cases, the very same phrases used in the book and in my lectures. I was delighted to know that someone, either Beck or his researchers, had spent a great deal of time studying The Creature from Jekyll Island. But what is even more encouraging is that several million viewers will be exposed to an hour of economic and monetary truth. This will bring us a giant step closer to actually slaying the Creature. This media exposure will open many minds that previously were closed on this topic. Now is the time to reach out to friends, neighbors, and leaders with an invitation to read the book. We must strike while the iron is hot.

Where does money come from? Where does it go? Who makes it? The money magicians’ secrets are unveiled. We get a close look at their mirrors and smoke machines, their pulleys, cogs, and wheels creating the grand illusion called money. Dry and boring subject? You’ll be hooked in five minutes. Reads like a detective story – which it really is. This book is about the most blatant scam of all history: the cause of wars, boom-bust cycles, inflation, depression, prosperity. Creature from Jekyll Island will change the way you view the world, politics, and money. You are experiencing the consequences of what happened in 1910.

The Creature from Jekyll Island
A fantastic but true story

By G. Edward Griffin
What has it to do with you?
Everything.

Our economic system is in trouble, people are losing jobs, housing prices are collapsing, with more to come...

This is happening now because of what happened on Jekyll Island in 1910. It was November of 1910 when Senator Nelson Aldridge sent his private railroad car to the New Jersey railroad station where it was held in readiness, awaiting the arrival of himself and six other men who were told to come under conditions of secrecy. They were told not be seen together as they went to the railroad station, not to dine together, not to tell anybody really except maybe the closest persons in their family where they were going, and certainly not even to tell them why they were going.

One of the men on that train carried a shotgun in a big black case for the purpose of – had he been stopped by a newspaper reporter and asked where he was going – he was prepared to say he was going on a duck hunting trip. And we discover later from the memoirs of one of his children that this man didn’t even own that gun, he never fired a shotgun in his life, and it was a borrowed weapon simply for the purpose of deception.

What were these seven men trying so desperately to hide?

After the men boarded the private railroad car – the equivalent of a private Boeing jet today – they were told that when they got on board, they were to continue the conditions of total secrecy. They were instructed not to address one another by their last names. They were told to address each other by first names only, and in the case of two of these men, they dropped their first names completely and adopted code names.

From the writings of one of these men who wrote about it years later: he said that the purpose of such secrecy was so that the servants on board the railroad car would not know the names of all the participants. Obviously, they knew the name of Senator Nelson Aldridge. They were employed by him. And, they might have known the names of one or two of the others but not all, and it was the list of all of these names together that was unusual; these were very powerful and influential and well-known men. If their presence on that train had been leaked by the servants, if they had just talked about it, it might have gone from one person to another person and the first thing you know it would have been in the newspapers and would have completely defeated the purpose of the meeting. And what was the purpose of the meeting?

Once on board the train, they traveled for two nights and a day. I’m sure they were discussing their ultimate plans all the way along, and when they awoke the next morning, they were at Brunswick, Georgia. They got off the train and were taken by ferry-boat across the inland straights to Jekyll Island. In those days, Jekyll Island was owned by a very small group of billionaires (by today’s inflated standards) from New York. It was a private island. It was a resort club where the families of the very, very wealthy went to escape the cold winter months of New York.

They had beautiful “cottages” as they called them. You can visit Jekyll Island today and you can see that these so-called cottages were really mansions – architectural splendors. But the showcase of the whole island was the clubhouse, and it too is still standing. You can visit there today. You don’t have to take a ferry-boat. You can now drive across a bridge. The clubhouse is a well-preserved beautiful wooden structure. It was in that clubhouse that the men went and sat around a little table in one of the blue rooms and cranked out all the details of what was to become the “Federal Reserve System.”

By the way, they also relieved all the servants at the clubhouse and brought in there. She was a wonderful lady and she was more than happy to open up all of her filing cabinets and show me photographs and notes and records dating to that meeting and that period – very helpful. So this is not secret information today. It comes from that library.

In 1910 those men sat around that table for a week and then, when they were done, they got back on the train, back in that private railroad car, and I’m sure they were still discussing it on the way back, and then they disappeared into the environs of Wall Street and New York.

For many years after that, these seven men denied – vehemently denied – that they attended such a meeting. Never happened, they said. Gradually, as the word got out and more people began to discuss it, they said, “Well yes, we went, but we just went to play some poker and smoke some good cigars, a gentleman’s meeting, you know, and do some duck hunting.

Finally, after the Federal Reserve Act was passed into law three years later in 1913 during Woodrow Wilson’s administration, and even after that, when people in America began to accept the existence of the Federal Reserve System, then and only then did these seven men begin to talk openly about their role and what they did there, what they discussed, and what decisions they made.

The decisions they made in 1910 are economically controlling you today as you read this article. Your future depends upon understanding what they are doing to you, your children, and our country – and doing something about it.

And so today, because of their memoirs and because of the biographies that have been written about them by friendly biographers, and by the notes of their children and through interviews with newspaper reporters, you can go to any well-stocked library today and read in minute detail exactly what was on the minds of these seven men, what decisions they made and why they came to those decisions.

We are now living, enduring, and suffering their legacy.

Now, who were these seven men? The first one I’ve already mentioned was Senator Nelson Aldridge. He was the one who owned the railroad car. He was of that special committee that was to draft this legislation. Now, you need to know more about him. He was a very wealthy man, he was a business associate of J. P. Morgan, he was the father-in-law to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., which of course made him the grandfather to our former Vice President of the United States, Nelson Rockefeller. You may remember that Nelson Rockefeller’s middle name was Aldridge; Nelson Aldridge Rockefeller, and so he was named after his very famous grandfather.

The second man on board the private railroad car to Jekyll Island was Abraham Piatt Andrew. He was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He was the only federal official on board, and even that is not a correct explanation or description of him, because he was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury because he came from a very wealthy banking family. He was primarily a banker before he went into Washington as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. So, his heart and his loyalties were really with the banks – an interesting person.

All of these seven characters were rich with history. Andrew later became a Congressman, but more than that, he represented some of the largest Wall Street investment firms and he also went to Moscow during the period leading up to the Bolshevik Revolution. He was instrumental in transmitting huge amounts of money from Wall Street into the coffers of the Bolsheviks. The plan as he and others explained it was simply to buy influence among the Bolsheviks so that when they came to power, they could then close the deal and exploit Russia’s natural resources and have some influence over the political Bolsheviks. Abraham Piatt Andrew was not just an Assistant Secretary of the Treasure ... he was a man with an interesting track record and was well connected with the banking system.

The third person on board was Frank Vanderlip. He was the president of the National City Bank of New York, which was one of the big banks – the biggest of all the banks at that time, representing the financial interests of William Rockefeller and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Henry Davidson was also on board that train. He was a senior partner of J. P. Morgan Company. Charles Norton was at Jekyll Island. He was the president of the First National Bank of New York, another one of the giants. Benjamin Strong was there. He was head of J. P. Morgan’s Banker’s Trust Company, and he later became the first actual head of the Federal Reserve System in 1913.

And, finally, last but not least: Paul Warburg was there. He was probably the most important person in terms of knowledge of banking. He was a naturalized American citizen. He was born in Germany and was a full partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and then he was a representative of the Rothschild’s banking dynasty in England and France, and throughout all of his career in the United States, he maintained a very close business relationship with his brother Max Warburg, who was head of the Warburg banking consortium in Germany and The Netherlands.

Those were the seven men who created the Federal Reserve System. By the way, about Warburg, if there are any little Orphan Annie fans here, you may remember the character Daddy Warbucks. If you had lived at that time, you would have known that Daddy Warbucks was really a characterization of Paul Warburg, even his appearance – the bald head and everything else.

These seven men were well known at the time and they were the subject of cartoons and caricatures. If you recall the game Monopoly, the original art work in Monopoly – a little fat banker with a cigar sitting on a bag of money – that’s J. P. Morgan.

Jekyll Island Hunting Club, built and owned by John Pierpont Morgan

new, temporary employees to serve this elite group – again for the purpose of not being able to recognize and therefore talk about the attendees.

If you visit the island today, don’t miss the main attraction. On the main floor as you’re going out what you would probably call the back door, is a little narrow hallway. Just before you step outside, turn to your left and there is a door, and on the door there’s a plaque, and it says, “In this room in 1910 the Federal Reserve was created.”

In that room there’s a table – possibly the same one used in 1910 – with a bunch of chairs around it and pictures of the men on the wall.

What I’m telling you is not secret, it’s just not well known. I went to the research facilities of the island. They had a librarian perhaps the most powerful politician in Washington at the time, second only to the President of the United States, who at the time was William Howard Taft. Aldridge was Chairman of the National Monetary Commission. That was the special branch of Congress which was given the job of coming up with proposed legislation that would be offered to Congress and to the American people as a solution to a big problem in banking.

The problem was that Americans were deeply concerned at that time over the concentration of financial power into the hands of a few powerful brokerage firms and banking institutions in Wall Street and in New York, and in those days they called that the Money Trust.

So Senator Aldridge was the chairman

These are the men who went to Jekyll Island under conditions of extreme secrecy and created the Federal Reserve System. According to estimates in the newspapers at the time, these men represented directly, through the wealth which they personally controlled or, indirectly, through the institutions which they directed – the banking institutions around the world. They represented approximately one-fourth of the wealth of the entire world. Now, think about that for a minute: are these the kind of fellows you would want to break the grip of the Money Trust?

Why did the banks and the federal government form this partnership? What’s in it for them? When people go into partnership, there’s usually something of benefit to both partners or they wouldn’t do it. So, let’s take a look at that and, in order to answer that question, we have to examine for a moment how money is created in America and most of the world today. I call this the Mandrake Mechanism, because it does enable the banks to create money out of nothing and to cause it to disappear back into nothing. Now, let’s see how this process works.

Congress likes to spend money – lots and lots of money, because that makes Congressmen popular; they get elected by giving away benefits, etc. Spending money is an important activity for politicians, but raising taxes in order to pay for their benefits is not a popular thing. So politicians always have this dilemma of how to spend more money without increasing taxes.

But if you’re a politician, that is no problem whatsoever. You just borrow it like anybody else might borrow it. If you want to spend more than you take in, you borrow it, and then you can spend it for awhile, at least. On the private side of the equation, people like you and me can only do that up to a point and then we run out of credit and we lose our property.

Politicians don’t have that little problem because they can just keep creating it and creating it, increasing the national debt and so forth, and they never expect to pay it back. It never crosses their minds. They just know that in their dark little hearts, they’re going to keep creating money, borrowing money, spending and spending, until the economy collapses, and then they will say, “Golly, I wonder what happened?” And then they’ll start it all over again until everyone is bankrupt.

Now what? Here’s where the Creature from Jekyll Island – the Federal Reserve System – comes into the picture. Let’s just mentally imagine that the Secretary of the Treasury walks into the Federal Reserve building and the president of the Federal Reserve says, “Come in, Sir, we’ve been expecting you. Since you come here every day, we know you’re here for a loan.” The treasury official says, “Yes, I’m here for a loan.” And the Federal Reserve officer says, “Well, how much would you like today?” And the treasury official says, “Oh, another billion would probably cover us until noon tomorrow.” And the Federal Reserve president says, “No problem.”

The treasury official says, thank you very much. On his way out, he deposits the billion dollar loan from the Federal Reserve into the account of the federal government, and now the federal government has another billion dollars, just like that. Everybody’s happy.

The question, though, is where did those billions of dollars come from? Who put it into the account? Who invested it in there? What account? As a matter of fact, it turns out there is no account. There’s no money. It is simply created. It’s just a bad check is all it is, but nobody’s allowed to call it a bad check because it’s “legalized” by the Federal Reserve Act. If you and I were to do it, we would go to jail; but the Federal Reserve can do it because Congress wants them to.

You see, this is a beautiful source of any amount of money in a heartbeat. Whenever the federal government needs paper “money” ... like all the bailouts you’ve been hearing about lately ... they get it – created out of thin air by the Federal Reserve. The Federal Reserve System creates it out of thin air anytime the government needs it and then gives it to the federal government, supposedly as a loan. But they’re not loaning anything. They’ve just created it. It’s an act of creation (of phony paper money unbacked by gold or silver), not an act of loaning. So that’s why the politicians are in the partnership because it is a very convenient and reassuring way to know that they can get any amount of “money” at an instant notice, any time they need it.

Why are the banks in it? The Federal Reserve says that the banks have to keep 10% of all their loans in reserve. So, if all their loans that are out there have to be backed by 10% in reserve – I, as a smart banker, get a piece of paper out there and I write across the top of the ledger “reserve.” I enter $1,000. Okay. $1,000 is 10% of what? Oh, $10,000. So that means I can loan $9,000 and still have 10% reserves, can’t I, because I put the reserve in first. So now, I can create the money out of thin air and loan it to you, and I’ve complied with my requirement through the Federal Reserve because I have 10% in reserve.

By the time they add in the interest they’re making on nothing, now the interest figure goes up by at least a factor of nine – at least that, and in some cases even more because they have ways of repeatedly rotating this process in and out and working on the float.

Let’s see how it affects you. When this money is created out of nothing, the money supply expands. It expands at a rate greater than the expansion of goods and services. The discrepancy between the money supply and the value that’s underneath it is what we call inflation. Prices appear to be going up. I say “appear” to be going up because they’re not really going up. What’s really happening is that the value of the dollar is going down. That’s the real equation.

Had we lived in ancient Rome and we had a one ounce gold coin, we would have been able to buy with it a nice toga, a hand-crafted belt, and a pair of sandals – that’s about the price. Today, we’ve got a once ounce gold coin, a Krugerrand or something with no particular numismatic value, just one ounce of gold, and you take it to a bank and cash it or take it to a coin store and cash it in real fast before your paper money loses value – and you’ll find you can buy a nice suit, a hand-crafted belt,

G. Edward Griffin, in his book The Creature from Jekyll Island lets us look behind the scenes at who makes money and at what price. Griffin named the mechanism on money creation after a cartoon character: In the 1940s, there was a comic strip character called Mandrake the Magician. His specialty was creating things out of nothing and, when appropriate, to make them disappear back into that same void. It is fitting, therefore, that the process to be described in this section should be named in his honor.

turned around and loaned out to somebody else. Once that money is created the object of the bank is to stay “loaned up” as they say. In reality the banks can never stay 100% loaned up and that ratio varies a lot but the objective is to stay loaned up to whatever extent is possible. Generally speaking once this money is created in the loan process it is out there in the economy forever, perpetually earning interest for one of the members of the banking cartel which created that money.

I came to the conclusion that the Federal Reserve needed to be abolished for six reasons. I’d like to read them to you now just so that you get an idea of where I’m coming from. I put these into the most concise phrasing that I can to make them somewhat shocking and maybe you’ll remember them:

1. The Federal Reserve is incapable of accomplishing its stated objectives.
2. It is a cartel operating against the public interest.
3. It’s the supreme instrument of usury.
4. It generates our most unfair tax.
5. It encourages war.
6. It destabilizes the economy.

The ten greatest dangers to America’s tea party movement

By Ray McBerry
TenthAmendmentSolutions.com

The Tea Party Movement has had a marked impact upon the political scene here in these united States over the last two years, and the potential for even greater success yet exists. However, the forces arrayed against those traditional Americans who believe that we should return to the founding principles that made America great are many; and dangers to the new burgeoning movement also exist. Some of the successes of the Tea Party Movement include the election of a handful of key officials at the national level and many others at the State and local level. Also of importance is the recognition by many politicians that the tea partiers have the ability to perform the watchdog role of “swing vote” in numerous closely-contested races around the country; and the jury is still out on whether the Tea Party will be able to actually hold the candidates that they have supported to the line on their campaign commitments to restore the Republic.

The real heart and soul of the Tea Party Movement has been the average American who has gotten back involved in the political process in an active way, in some cases for the first time ever. For far too long, most honest, God-fearing Americans have avoided the political fray because politics is by nature tainted with those things that most respectable people find repulsive, including the mudslinging and outright lies. Then there is the fact that the unseen “powers that be” have so destroyed the fabric and financial hardiness of most families that many spend so many hours “at work” each week that they have little in the way of time or energy to offer something that they have viewed in the past as an activity where they can have marginal impact anyway. Too many others have fallen for the perception created for them by the enemy that surely they must be the “only” ones who still feel as they do – that surely there aren’t enough Americans who still believe that the old ways are the best ways when it comes to our founding principles. In spite of all these reasons to not get involved, though, traditional Americans by the thousands are getting up off the couch and out of the recliner to get out and literally create a political impact out of thin air.

There have been some key individuals who have played invaluable roles in the early stages of prompting and organizing the Tea Party Movement, most notably Congressman Ron Paul. Although there are many tea partiers who still do not know of Ron Paul and others who know of him but do not think that he is the best choice of a presidential candidate for the Movement, the truth is that his creation of the national Campaign for Liberty during his past presidential bid in the Republican primary is what jumpstarted American traditionalists to activism and became the impetus for the larger Tea Party Movement. Without Ron Paul and Campaign for Liberty, it is doubtful that the Movement would have ever taken off with the success that it has enjoyed.

But there are a number of imminent dangers facing America’s relatively new Tea Party Movement. Its enemies are many and come from numerous seemingly different sectors; but the truth is that the only entity which can bring about the destruction of the Tea Party’s effectiveness is the Tea Party, itself. History reveals all too well that most productive movements such as this are eventually watered down or fall apart from within. Destruction from within can arise from over-inflated egos, failure on the part of the average member to understand the real issues and their sources, or even the undermining work of agent provocateurs. All of these forces are added.

Just like Colonel Gaddafi and Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, Alexander Lukashenko is an autocrat who rules his country with an iron fist, but because he refuses to play ball with the globalists, Belarus has now become the next target of the manufactured global uprising, with U. S.-trained militants waiting in the wings to overthrow Lukashenko and hand the country over to the NATO powers who are busy swallowing up nations as part of their long term agenda to isolate Russia and China.

Belarus is in the cross hairs because of its repeated refusal to join NATO, leading globalists at the recent Globsec 2011 conference to declare the country a threat to the EU and NATO. Of course, the tiny Russian satellite State poses no military threat whatsoever, but the notion that any sovereign country would have the gall to want to run its own affairs without being dictated to by global government is in the eyes of the new world order kingpins intolerable.

That’s why Lukashenko and Belarus were listed by the infamous Freedom House in an article entitled “Who’s Next?” that was published in the Council on Foreign Relation’s Foreign Policy magazine back in February.

While NATO and its allies kill protesters, women and children in Afghanistan, the western media have savaged Lukashenko already at work within the Tea Party to some degree or another; and it is not yet apparent whether enough good people involved in the Movement will have sustained vigilance enough to prevent the natural course of these forces from having their way. I submit the following list of immediate dangers in the hope that, having been identified, they might be avoided by America’s Tea Party Movement on its way to the restoration of the Republic – any American republic.

In descending order, culminating with the most likely and most dangerous pitfalls near the end, here is the list:

#10. Leaders concentrating their efforts on building a national organization. One of the greatest strengths of the Tea Party is its emphasis upon the local level. Recruitment, activism, achieving goals, electing constitutional candidates, and swaying public opinion is all done best at the local level; yet almost from the beginning of the Tea Party’s initial success and notoriety, some of the “leadership” of the Movement have expended time and energy making the Tea Party into a national organization (and have tried to get local leaders to spend time and money to do it). Despite the tendency to believe that a “national” organization is inherently more effective and “better,” the effort to create a unified national organization expends many valuable resources building the organization which would otherwise be put to work accomplishing the original goals of the Tea Party.

#9. An emphasis upon national politics. The notion that national politics is more important than local and State politics is both flawed and a creation of the late twentieth century. While it is true that the federal government has bestowed upon itself unconstitutional powers never granted by our Founding Fathers, continuing to emphasize national politics as the remedy will not solve the problem; indeed, it is for cracking down on demonstrations in Minsk.

Warmongering U. S. Senator Joe Lieberman also publicly attacked Lukashenko during a speech last month, calling for the Belarusian President to release “activists” who are in fact U. S.-trained militants attempting to overthrow Lukashenko, which might also provide us an indication of who was behind the metro bombing that killed 12 people last month.

As Tony Cartalucci explains in his excellent article, Besieging Belarus: Next on the Globalists’ Chopping Block, “Of course, these Belarusian activists have been trained, funded, and equipped by the West alongside activists that have participated in the now admittedly U. S.-funded ‘Arab Spring.’ Foreign Policy magazine’s article ‘Revolution U’ reported that the U. S. funded and supported CANVAS organization has trained activists from 50 different countries including Belarus. Shortly after CANVAS, then called Otpor, overthrew Serbia’s Slobodan Milosevic in 2000, they began clandestinely traveling to Belarus to meet with student activists. Ultimately their network was discovered and shut down. They would later infiltrate Georgian and Ukrainian politics and assist in the Rose and Orange color revolutions respectively.

“In 2007, the U. S. International Republican Institute (IRI) openly admitted to funding and supporting activists inside exactly the ineffective tactic that the enemy would like the Tea Party to adopt. Politics and, by default, politicians in Washington are contrived and controlled by the unseen powers whose only allegiance is to wealth and power; neither principle nor the love of their fellow countrymen are important to them. The establishment in Washington will continue its present course no matter how many constitutionalists are elected to Congress because the system which they have created does not follow the law anyway. The surest means to liberty is to elect local and State officials who will govern according to our founding principles and who will, if necessary, invoke the God-given American rights of nullification and interposition to prevent federal tyranny. It is these local politicians who are more easily within arm’s length and who will be more responsive to Tea Party efforts; for they and their families must still live and shop and worship among us.

#8. Activism without education. As we have experienced in recent days, “change” just for the sake of “change” is no better than our current crisis. Holding rallies, marches and protests have value, particularly in recruitment of additional patriots; but, without an understanding of the goal and the tools to reach it, they will become a replacement for actually affecting real change. In order to restore the constitutional Republic bequeathed to us by our Founding Fathers, it is essential that we understand the principles of liberty and the boundaries for civil government established by the Creator and understood from the beginning of our American tradition.

#7. Education without activism. Likewise, there is a danger in Tea Party members becoming educated “sponges,” soaking up vast amounts of knowledge... and then doing nothing with it. There are many educational “think tanks” and organizations already in existence who produce quality materials with essential

Belarus in an appeal to garner similar support from European Union members.”

The National Democratic Institution (NDI) also admits conducting “democracy assistance programs” in Belarus since 2000, which is merely globalist code for violent destabilization campaigns. Current NDI President Kenneth Wollack, a key Brookings Institute and Council on Foreign Relations member, also gave a speech earlier this year in which he demanded that Belarus be forced to join the “trans-Atlantic Community” (new world order), and called on the globalists to use the U. S.-trained and funded opposition to fill the “political vacuum when openings occur.”

Belarus has blatantly been identified as one of the next dominoes to drop if the globalists can reinvigorate their staged “Arab Spring” which has temporarily ground to a halt in Libya after the failure of NATO-backed rebels to overthrow Gaddafi.

The evidence is now overwhelming that the wave of revolutions sweeping the globe which started in Tunisia earlier this year has been completely hijacked by globalist interests and is being used to mop up the few remaining “rogue States,” countries like Belarus, that have steadfastly refused to become vassal States for the global elite’s march towards world government. By getting out ahead of the turmoil and making it clear that Belarus is in the firing line, Lukashenko is desperately trying to keep his country from being plundered by neo-colonialists who are in the throws of a massive geopolitical putsch to swallow up every single remaining country into the new world order borg collective.

Lukashenko: Globalists are looking to strangle Belarus

“They want to force us to be just like everybody else. We will resist.”

prisonplanet.com

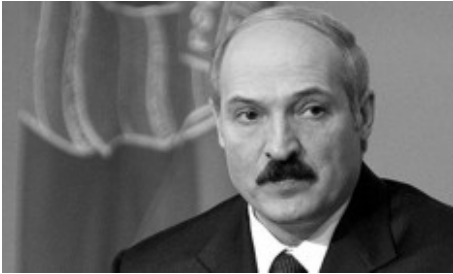

BELARUSIAN President Alexander Lukashenko warned on April 21 that the globalists were preparing to strangle his country because of its refusal to join the new world order, with Belarus set to become the latest target of the contrived “Arab Spring” riots as the NATO powers further encircle Russia and China.

“Belarusian President Alexander Lukashenko said on Thursday Western countries are preparing direct interference in his country’s affairs and are trying “to strangle the country with a slipknot,” reports RIA Novosti.

“First there were political threats, disavowal of [presidential] elections, [European] entry bans and economic sanctions. Then there was an instigation of turmoil on our foreign currency market and dances on the bones after the blast at the Oktyabrskaya metro station,” Lukashenko said addressing the parliament and his people.

Highlighting how the power elite designates any country that refuses to sacrifice its own sovereignty as a “rogue State,” Lukashenko spoke of how the elite “want to force us to be just like everybody else, like they are eventually. We are like a bone in their throat.”

“If they try to bend us, to bring us down to our knees, we will at least resist. We will fight for our plot of land,” the president information for restoring constitutional republican government in America. If the Tea Party becomes a “study group” and ceases its relentless pursuit of those elected officials who have betrayed their oath or affirmation of office, it will have given up its most significant contribution to the current struggle to restore liberty.

#6. Creation of third parties. While it is true that, at least at the national level, both major political parties have become two sides of the same socialist coin, it is equally true that under the current system, dabbling in the creation of third parties is counter-productive and a sure way to kill a movement. The time and energy required to gain ballot access and sustain viability as a political party, in most States, would literally use up all of the resources available to tea partiers, leaving little for actually campaigning for the candidates of such a party. It also would create a problem in areas where existing political candidates have been cooperative or even friendly to the efforts of the Tea Party but would likely lose their seats if they chose to switch parties. It must be remembered that the goal of the Tea Party Movement is to restore a constitutional Republic – not to get elected or build an organization. If tea partiers work together as an effective voting block, they can easily control the ten percent of votes necessary to sway virtually any election in the direction of their choosing; and it will not take political candidates long to figure this out. By not pledging undying fealty to either of the major parties, the Tea Party is able to jump on whichever “train” is willing to go the right direction and ride it as long as it goes that way and then jump another passing train when that direction changes. In this way, incumbents will no longer feel the uninterrupted luxury that they have in the past. On the other hand, should the Tea Party expend its limited resources to create a third political party, it will eventually go the way of other such parties from the recent and distant past as its success will be inextricably tied to the success of its political party.

#5. Accepting 501©)(3) nonprofit status. If the Tea Party accepts this nonprofit status (as some local tea party groups have already done), it will find itself chained with the very same restrictions that churches who have made this decision have found. The benefits of IRS approved nonprofit status are few, particularly for organizations such as the tea party who are active and have few if any funds left over at the end of the fiscal year. In the very rare case that an individual’s decision to make a sizeable financial contribution is predicated upon the promise of a tax deduction, the hurdle is usually a simple one solved by making an “advertising” expenditure for the individual’s business or making the contribution through a related nonprofit foundation which then grants funds for certain political causes within IRS guidelines for different kinds of lobbying efforts. The restrictions with which any organization becomes encumbered, however, are enormous – particularly when the organization must be able to single out individual politicians for scorn and ridicule when they veer from their oath of office. If the Tea Party gives up its right to target individual candidates for promotion or scorn, it will have severely watered down its original effectiveness.

#4. A misunderstanding of what is meant by “impartial” or “nonpartisan.” Some Tea Party groups have unwittingly tied their own hands from affecting the outcome of elections by refusing to endorse good, constitutional candidates for fear that it means they are not being

“impartial” or “nonpartisan.” If the Tea Party steadfastly holds all candidates to a litmus test of constitutional criteria as a condition for support, there is no need to worry about such criticisms. Candidates should be informed that, no matter their party affiliation (or lack thereof), they will either be targeted for defeat or endorsed by the Tea Party based solely upon their knowledge of and stand upon constitutional principles and the issues of importance to the Tea Party. In so doing, there is no special favour bestowed upon a candidate because of incumbency, party affiliation, race, gender, or any other factor than principle. A refusal of the Tea Party to endorse candidates, particularly in close elections, again waters down its effectiveness and prevents its ability to effectively mobilize a solid voting block.

#3. Selfish personalities building their own little kingdoms. Unlike Ron Paul, there are many individuals who have made their way into the Tea Party because they see it as a way to build their own influence or prestige... or simply because they wish to feel important. Because it is a true grassroots movement, the Tea Party leaders in many locales are people who simply got out and started having meetings, much to their credit; in some instances, though, self-appointment is the sole criteria for these leaders to stay in control of their own meetings and groups even when it is to the disadvantage of the group. Everyone in the Tea Party must be willing to carry their own share of both the burden and the

Tyranny in a small town
aloe910@aol.com

Five years ago we moved from the east side of Pender County to the west side. Our place is even further down a dirt road than the “old” place, with water as the rear boundary. We are at the end of a two-mile, two-track dirt road and have a wrought iron, automatic gate with signs warning everyone, especially the government, to stay out. So we like our privacy; and, if you’ve been keeping up, I like my rights (or my illusion of rights) respected.

We also have two storage buildings, and a colonial house, our “legal residence” in the nearby town of Atkinson, incorporated in 1912, comprising a total of five taxable lots. They are all on well and septic. Four years ago the town fathers started to talk about getting a public water system for the town. I let them know right up front that I would not object to a public water system as long as I was not forced to hook up to it. While I might volunteer to hook up, I made it clear I would not allow the government to force me to hook up without a fight, that I would file a federal lawsuit for violations of my right to private property. I realize some or most of the wells in the town are not satisfactory to the property owners. I believe new deep wells would solve their problems, but it appears using other people’s money just has too much appeal.

I completely understand that the town is a State-created corporate entity and anyone owning property within the town limits is subject to the ordinances and whims of the town, so long as those do not violate his common law or federally protected rights. But, when I bought property in the town, it was a well and septic scenario; and I will not easily allow any government to dictate limits on my freedom. I am convinced that vision but must also be willing to step aside from time to time when someone else comes forward who can advance the banner more effectively in a particular role. Again, tea partiers must remember that the spirit of the Tea Party belongs to no one individual; it is older than these united States and has belonged to every patriotic American since our fathers brought their struggles for liberty here from other continents long ago. Those seeking to build a national Tea Party organization or to bring local tea party organizations together under regional control should be the first suspects of those wishing to avoid this pitfall. When “leaders” at the State, regional, or national level ask (or in some cases, order) local Tea Party leaders to cancel their own meetings, rallies, parades and plans to support their larger events, the original strength and importance of the Tea Party as a grassroots organization is in jeopardy. Whether in Atlanta, D. C., or any other major city, Tea Party events are no more important there than the ones in your own hometown. Local Tea Party leaders should beware this treachery.

#2. Centralization. The easiest way to destroy any popular uprising is to consolidate all of the groups involved into one organization. The rest is merely a question of what tactic the enemy wishes to employ to disparage, litigate, or assassinate (figuratively or literally) the organization and its leadership out of existence. It’s that simple... ask any totalitarian regime the world over. Centralization makes an organization easy to seduce, malign, and topple. De-centralization, on the other hand, makes a popular movement nearly impossible to destroy. A thousand brush fires are nearly impossible to extinguish; and, even were one to try to do so, another thousand would be begun before the embers of the first vanished into the night. The enemy wishes to centralize the Tea Party’s leadership, funding, choice of candidates, once “they” own one’s water, he is, de facto, their slave. Of course, one still has the option of moving, but in today’s economy the likelihood of selling what he has is slim or none, so that option is a dead letter in most cases.

In August, 2008, the mayor signed away what autonomy Atkinson ever had to the federal government in order to get some “free” money for its water system in the amount of $990,000.00. As one Alderman told me, “We are entitled to that money. It’s time we get something back.” The mayor agreed to:

1. Comply with the Drug-Free Workplace Act of 1988;
2. Comply with EPA standards (Clean Water Act of 1973);
3. Comply with the Civil Rights Act of 1964;
4. Comply with Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments;
5. Comply with Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973; and
6. Comply with the Age Discrimination Act of 1975.

So, here again, the carrot of “federal funding” has enslaved the people.

There is an additional loan from the NC Rural Center for $432,000.00 to be paid back by user fees with interest over 40 years, and $29,000.00 to be provided by the town from “hook-ups” and the general fund. A bond referendum was passed by the registered voters of Atkinson to cover that loan. It all sounds very nice, except Atkinson occupies only one square mile and has 159 end-user parcels for the water system. That number actually represents only about 130 individuals because several people, including me, own multiple user parcels. One final requirement under those contracts the mayor signed is “mandatory hook-up” for all 159 users, and the town etc. because it is then a “controllable” entity. As it is, the enormous de-centralization of the Tea Party Movement is the enemy’s worst nightmare. It is why the enemy is terrified of the possibilities!

#1. Becoming co-opted by the GOP. Beginning with the big Tea Party rallies in Atlanta and around the country after the election of Barak Obama, Tea Party detractors noted – and rightly so – that the Tea Party seemed more about bashing Obama and Democrats than about restoring constitutional principles. Because we live in an era when most genuine constitutionalists are running for office as big “R” Republicans, there are many within the Tea Party who see the purpose of the Movement as a rubber-stamp to help the GOP get things back on track. This is unfortunate when, in light of history, virtually every Republican administration in the White House has been just as guilty of trampling the Constitution for the last 150 years of American history as have Democrats. It is time that Americans cease voting for candidates merely because of political party affiliation (or lack thereof) and begin, once again, to become knowledgeable of each candidate’s positions on the issues and their understanding of the Constitution. Republicans who do not uphold their oath of office to abide by the Constitution should be ridden out of town on a rail just as quickly as Democrats. There are already enough radio talk show hosts carrying water for the GOP without the Tea Party selling out for anything less than a true constitutional revival... and better to wait for the proof in the pudding before signing over the country!

has mandated that private wells cannot remain connected. At every turn, I have reminded the town that I will not be forced to “hook-up” and will file a lawsuit if they try. So we can see where this is going.

In the past two and a half years, many discussions of the water system have been held at monthly town meetings and otherwise. When I’m in attendance, I remind them of my promise. At the November, 2010, meeting, I raised the question of easements and rights-of-way for the water pipes. The mayor expected most people to voluntarily grant easements, but acknowledged that at least one owner’s land would have to be condemned under imminent domain and purchased (Fifth Amendment). That would be mine. I again informed him and the aldermen that as soon as the town took action to condemn my land for water pipes, I would file the first of two lawsuits and seek a temporary restraining order. They only smiled at the crazy man. I was told to expect my condemnation papers within the month. What I did get was a document for my signature which would voluntarily grant the easement. When I read the document, it was clear that the only right I would have left to the property would be the right to mow the grass and police trash off the easement.

In December, 2010, I informed the town attorney (a.k.a. Political Officer) that the DOT rights-of-way did not exist for those three State roads on which the town planned to piggyback their water pipes. Three of my five parcels are adjacent to the State roads, which now makes a total of four condemnations just for me.

At the February, 2011, town meeting, I asked the status of those easements, having heard not a word about my condemnations. Nothing had been done on that subject. I also asked how the contract to build the system had been let for bids when the

Jewish control of the American Theater

Back when this inventor/writer warned America to beware of the Jews, they hadn’t yet bought most of “our” so-called representatives.

By Henry Ford

The Dearborn Independent, 1 January 1921

The Theater has long been a part of the Jewish program for guidance of public taste and the influencing of the public mind. Not only is the Theater given a special place in the program of the Protocols, but it is the instant ally night by night and week by week of any idea which the “power behind the scenes” wishes to put forth. It is not by accident that in Russia, where they now have scarcely anything else, they still have the Theater, specially revived, stimulated and supported by Jewish-Bolshevists because they believe in the Theater just as they believe in the Press; it is one of the two great means of molding popular opinion.

Everybody has assumed offhand that the Theater is Jew-controlled. Few, if put to the test, could prove it, but all believe it. The reason they believe it is not so much what they see as what they feel; the American feel has gone out of the Theater; a dark, Oriental atmosphere has come instead.

Not only the “legitimate” stage, so-called, but the motion picture industry – the fifth greatest of all the great industries – is also Jew-controlled, not in spots only, not 50 per cent merely, but entirely; with the natural consequence that now the world is in arms against the trivializing and demoralizing influences of that form of entertainment as at present managed. As soon as the Jew gained control of American liquor, we had a liquor problem with drastic consequences. As soon as the Jew gained control of the “movies,” we had a movie problem, the consequences of which are not yet visible. It is the genius of that race to create problems of a moral character in whatever business they achieve a majority.

Every night hundreds of thousands of people give from two to three hours to the Theater, every day literal millions of people give up from 30 minutes to two hours to the Movies; and this simply means that millions of Americans every day place themselves voluntarily within range of Jewish ideas of life, love and labor; within range of Jewish propaganda, sometimes cleverly, sometimes clumsily concealed. This gives the Jewish masseur of the public mind all the opportunity he desires; and his only protest now is that exposure may make his game a trifle difficult.

The Theater is Jewish not only on its managerial side, but also on its literary and professional side. More and more plays are appearing whose author, producer, star and cast are entirely Jewish. They are not great plays, they do not remain long. This is natural enough, since the Jewish theatrical interests are not seeking artistic triumphs, they are not seeking the glory of the American stage, nor are they striving to develop great actors to take the place of the old line of worthies. Not at all. Their interest is financial and racial – getting the Gentiles’ money and Judaizing the Theater. There is a tremendous Judaizing movement on; the work is almost complete. Boastful articles are beginning to appear in the Jewish press, which is always a sign.

Gentile attendants on the Theater are frequently insulted to their faces, and never know it. Recently one of the best known Jewish entertainers on the stage indulged in vulgar and sacrilegious references to Jesus Christ, whereat the Semitic portions of his audience went into loud laughter, while the Gentiles sat blank-faced – because the remarks were in Yiddish asides!

Time after time the Jewish entertainer did that thing, and it was plain to one who knew that the Jewish portion of the audience was enjoying the insult to the Gentiles much more than they were enjoying the well-worn humor of the entertainer’s remarks. It was a great thing for them that in several important American cities they could see and hear being done under cover, and to American Gentiles, what is being done openly to Russian Gentiles.

In the audience referred to there was probably $4,500 to $5,000 in gate money represented. Of this the Jews present, at the very highest estimate, could not have contributed more than $500. Yet the Jewish star several times slapped the religious sensibilities of the major portion of his audience under cover of Yiddish. The Theater is felt by him and his ilk to be a Jewish institution.

Down to 1885 the American Theater was still in the hands of the Gentiles. From 1885 dates the first invasion of Jewish influence. It meant the parting of the ways, and the future historian of the American State will describe that year with the word “Ichabod.” That year marks not only the beginning of the Jewish wedge of control, but something far more important.

It is not important that managers are now Jews whereas managers were formerly Gentiles. That is not important. The importance begins with the fact that with the change of managers there came also a decline in the art and morals of the stage, and that this decline has become accelerated as the Jewish control became widened. What Jewish control means is this: that everything has been deliberately and systematically squeezed out of the American Theater except its most undesirable elements, and these undesirable elements have been exalted to the highest place of all.

The Great Age of the American Theater is past. About the time that Jewish control appeared, Sheridan, Sothern, McCullough, Madame Janaushek, Mary Anderson, Frank Mayo, John T. Raymond, began to pass off the stage. It was natural that, life being brief, they should pass at last, but the appalling fact began to be apparent that they had left no successors! Why? Because a Hebrew hand was on the stage, and the natural genius of the stage was no longer welcomed. A new form of worship was to be established.

“Shakespeare spells ruin,” was the utterance of a Jewish manager. “High-brow stuff” is also a Jewish expression. These two sayings, one appealing to the managerial end, the other to the public end of the Theater, have formed the epitaph of the classic era. All that remained after the Hebrew hand fell across the stage were a few artists who had received their training under the Gentile school – Julia Marlowe, Tyrone Power, R. D. McLean, and, a little later, Richard Mansfield, Robert Mantell, E. H. Sothern. Two of this group remain, and with Maude Adams they constitute the last flashings of an era that has gone – an era that apparently leaves no great exemplars to perpetuate it.

The present-day average of intelligence appealed to in the American Theater does not rise above 13 to 18 years. “The tired business man” stuff (another Jewish expression) has treated the theater-going public as if it were composed of morons.

The appeal is frankly to a juvenile type of mind which can be easily molded to the ideals of the Hebraic theatrical monopoly. Clean, wholesome plays – the few that remain – are supported mainly by the rapidly vanishing race of theatergoers who survive from an earlier day; the present generation has been educated by the narrowed compass of modern dramatic themes to support plays of an entirely different type. Tragedy is taboo; the play of character, with a deeper significance than would delight the mind of a child, is out of favor; the comic opera has degenerated into a flash of color and movement – a combination of salacious farce and jazz music, usually supplied by a Jewish songwriter (the great purveyors of jazz!) and the rage is for extravaganza and burlesque.

The bedroom farce has been exalted into the first place. With the exception of “Ben Hur,” which is favored by Jewish producers apparently because it holds before the public a romantic picture of a Jew (a very un-Jewish Jew, by the way), the historical drama has given way to fleshly spectacles set off with overpowering scenic effects, the principal component of which is an army of girls (mostly Gentiles!) whose investment of drapery does not exceed five ounces in weight.

Frivolity, sensuality, indecency, appalling illiteracy and endless platitude are the marks of the American Stage as it approaches its degeneracy under Jewish control.

That, of course, is the real meaning of all the “Little Theater” movements that have begun in so many cities and towns in the United States. The art of drama, having been driven out of the Theater by the Jews, is finding a home in thousands of study circles throughout the United States. The people cannot see the real plays; therefore they read them. The plays that are acted could not be read at all, for the most part, any more than the words of jazz songs can be read; they don’t mean anything. The people who want to see the real plays and cannot, because Jewish producers won’t produce them, are forming little dramatic clubs of their own, in barns and churches, in schools and neighborhood halls. The drama fled from its exploiters and has found a home with its friends.

The changes which the Jews have made in the theater, and which any half-observant theatergoer can verify with his own eyes, are four in number.

First, they have elaborated the mechanical side, making human talent and genius less necessary. They have made the stage “realistic” instead of interpretative. The great actors needed very little machinery; the men and women on the pay rolls of the Jewish managers are helpless without the machinery. The outstanding fact about the vast majority of present-day performances of any pretension is that the mechanical part dwarfs and obscures the acting, however good. And this is the reason: knowing that good actors are growing scarce, knowing that the Jewish policy is death to talent, knowing perhaps most keenly of all that good actors constitute a running charge on his revenue, the Jewish producer prefers to put his faith and his money in wood, canvas, paint, cloth and tinsel of which scenery and costumes are made. Wood and paint never show contempt for his sordid ideals and his betrayal of his trust.

And thus we have when we go to the theater today, bursts of color, ruffles of lace and linen, waving lines and dazzling effects of light and motion – but no ideas, a great many stage employees, but very few actors. There are drills and dances without end, but no drama.

That is one influence on the American Theater that the Jew claims, and the credit for which can be given him in full. He has put in the iridescence, but he has taken out the profounder ideas. He has placed the American public in the position of being able to remember the names of plays without being able to recall what composed them. Like the “Floradora Girls,” a Jewish creation, we remember the name of the group, but not of any individual in it. The Jew has done this to perfection, but no one will contend that it represents a forward step; taken by and large, it is part of a very serious and harmful retrogression.

Second, the Jews may be credited with having introduced Oriental sensuality to the American stage. Not even the most ardent Jewish defender will deny this, for the thing is there, before the eyes of all who will see. Little by little the mark of the filthy tide has risen against the walls of the American Theater until now it is all but engulfed. It is a truism that there is more unrefined indecency in the higher class theaters today than was ever permitted by the police in the burlesque houses. The lower classes must be restrained in the vicarious exercise of their lower natures, apparently, but the wealthier classes may go the limit. The price of the ticket and the “class” of the playhouse seems to make all the difference in the world between prohibited and permissible evil.

In New York, where Jewish managers are thicker than they ever will be in Jerusalem, the limit of theatrical adventuresomeness into the realm of the forbidden is being pushed further and further. Last season’s spectacle of “Aphrodite” seemed to be deliberately designed as a frontal attack on the last entrenched scruple of moral conservatism. The scenes are most Oriental in their voluptuous abandonment. Men in breech-clouts, leopard skins and buckskins, women in flimsy gowns of gossamer texture, slashed to the hips, with very little besides, made a bewildering pageant whose capstone was the unveiling of a perfectly nude girl whose body had been painted to resemble marble. Save that it was all designed, and all put through on schedule, it was almost the “limit” to which such exhibitions could go in real life. Its promoter, of course, was a Jew. As an entertainment it was infantile; the splendor of its insinuations, the daring of its situations, were the fruitage of long study of the art of seducing the popular mind.

It was said when “Aphrodite” first appeared that the police had moved against it, but some held that this was a clever press-agent stunt to excite public interest in the promised pruriency. It was also said that even had the police interference been the genuine result of outraged official minds, the fact that the Jews of New York are represented in the judiciary out of all proportions to their numbers, would have rendered the Jewish producer free from interference. In any event, the piece was not molested. The sale of narcotics is illegal, but the instilling of insidious moral poison is not.

The whole loose atmosphere of “cabaret” and “midnight frolic” entertainment is of Jewish origin and importation. Mention the best known and the worst known, they are all Jewish. The runway down which less than half-dressed girls cavort, fluttering their loose finery in the faces of the spectators, is an importation from Vienna, but a Jewish creation. The abuses of the runway will not bear description here. The Paris boulevards and Montmartre have nothing at all in the nature of lascivious entertainment that New York cannot duplicate. BUT neither New York nor any other American city has that Comedie Francaise that strives to counterbalance the evil of Paris.

Where have the writers for the Stage a single chance in this welter of sensuousness? Where have the actors of tragic or comic talent a chance in such productions? It is the age of the chorus girl, a creature whose mental caliber has nothing to do with the matter, and whose stage life cannot in the very nature of things be a career.

It is only occasionally that a great writer for the stage, a Shaw, a Masefield, a Barrie, an Ibsen, or any Gentile writer of merit, is permitted to get as far as actual production, and then only for a short period; the stream of colored electric lighting effects, of women and tinsel closes in behind them and they are washed away, to survive in printed books among those who still know what the Theater ought to be.

A third consequence of Jewish domination of the American stage has been the appearance of “the New York star” system, with its advertising appliances. The last few years of the Theater have been marked by numerous “stars” that really never rose and certainly never shone, but which were hoisted high on the advertising walls of the Jewish theatrical syndicates in order to give the public the impression that these feeble lantern-lights were in the highest heaven of dramatic achievement.

The trick is a department store trick. It is sheer advertising strategy. The “stars” of yesterday, who did not even survive yesterday were either the personal favorites of the managers, or goods taken off the shelf and heaped into the window for the sake of giving the appearance of a new stock. In brief, whereas in normal times the public made the “star” by their acclaim, nowadays the Jewish managers determine by their advertisements who the star shall be. The “New York stamp,” which frequently means nothing at all, is the one imperial sign of favor, according to the Jewish theatrical hierarchy. It is just this “New York stamp” that the rest of the country protests against; and the “little theater” movement throughout the West and Central West is a significant protest.

A Mary Anderson or a Julia Marlowe would be impossible under the Jewish system. They were disciples of art, who later became artists, and then were rightfully acclaimed as stars. But their development was a tedious process. Their fame was based on the rising approval of the people, year after year. These actresses put in season after season traveling the same circuit, learning little by little, rounding out their work. They did not have nor did they seek the “New York stamp”; they worked first for the approval of the people of “the provinces,” which is the contemptuous Jewish term for the rest of the United States. There was, however, no Jewish dictatorship of the Theater when Mary Anderson and Julia Marlowe were building their art and careers; which throws a light on the reason for there being no Mary Andersons or Julia Marlowes coming up to the succession.

The Jew seeks immediate success in all but racial affairs. In this breakdown of the Gentile theater, the process cannot be too swift for him. The training of artists takes time. It is far simpler to have the advertising bills serve as a substitute and, as the itinerant faker-dentist had a brass band blare loud enough to drown the anguished cries of his victims, so the Jewish manager seeks to divert attention from the dramatic poverty of the Theater by throwing confetti, limbs, lingerie and spangles dazzlingly into the eyes of his audience.

These three results of Jewish control in the Theater are all explainable by a fourth; the secret of the serious change which has occurred since 1885 is found in the Jewish tendency to commercialize everything it touches. The focus of attention has been shifted from the Stage to the box office. The banal policy of “give the public what they want” is the policy of the panderer, and it entered the American Theater with the first Jewish invasion.

About 1885 two alert Jews established in New York a so-called booking agency and offered to take over the somewhat cumbersome system by which managers of theaters in St. Louis, Detroit or Omaha arranged engagements of attractions for their houses for the ensuing season. The old process involved extensive correspondence with producing managers in the East and many local managers were obliged to spend several months in New York to make up a season’s bookings. The advantages were that the booking agency, supplied with a list of the “open dates” of the houses they represented, were able to lay out a complete season’s itinerary, or “route,” for a traveling company and enabled the producer of a play to spend his vacation at the seashore instead of passing the sultry mid-season in New York, while the local manager was saved the trouble of much writing or even a trip East, and was content to let the booking concern attend to all details and send him his next season’s bookings when completed.

In this manner was laid the foundation of the later-day Theatrical Trust. The booking firm was that of Klaw & Erlanger, the former a young Jew from Kentucky who had studied law, but drifted into theatrical life as an agent; the latter a young Jew from Cleveland with little education but with experience as an advance agent. The booking system was not of their devising. They borrowed the idea from Harry C. Taylor who established a sort of theatrical exchange where producers and local managers could meet, desks being provided them at a small rental, and who took over the booking in the smaller cities, without foreseeing – but probably scorning – the opportunity thus placed in his hands to club the whole theatrical world into submission to his dictates.

With characteristic shrewdness Klaw & Erlanger elaborated the idea they had borrowed from Taylor, opened competition against the latter and enlisted the support of a number of young Jewish advance agents who were beginning to recognize the lucrative opportunities which the theatrical profession afforded. Prominent among their earlier supporters was Charles Frohman, employed by J. H. Haverley. His brother, Daniel, had been business manager for the Mallorys at the Madison Square Theater since 1881, and though the Frohmans stand out in relief from the background of the Polish Jewish influence on the theater, they found it to their advantage to co-operate with the booking firm and subsequently became prominent members of the Trust.

The establishment of the Jewish booking agency system is the key to the whole problem of the decline of the American stage. The old booking system had the enormous advantage of the personal touch in the relationship between manager and company, and made possible the easements were not in place, a State requirement prior to starting the bidding process. I was informed the town had gotten a waiver from the Department of Agriculture. Regarding easements, the Political Officer suggested that if no one complained within two years of the start of the project the town would have no liability to landowners regarding payment of damages or for an easement, citing the nearby town of Burgaw which had done just that with its recent acquisition of water distribution from the neighboring town of Wallace. I immediately objected to the suggestion that the town would try to beg forgiveness and not ask permission of the landowners to cross their property.

I informed them of some friends of mine who, in a similar situation with the South Carolina DOT, had defended their land from the State by force of arms leaving two deputies dead, one family member shot twice never to recover, one in prison with two life sentences and one on death row with two death sentences; and advised them that we don’t want to go there. The mayor said, “At this point, I am willing to do whatever it takes to get the rust out of my water.” The Political Officer then suggested the town have a public hearing to allow people to object to the crossing of their land with water pipes. I agreed to that.

The public hearing was held early in April. Four people showed up for the hearing on the water system (other than the aldermen, the mayor and the town clerk), one of whom was myself. Only two spoke up, both agreeing that the town would have to ask permission to cross private land. I made an appeal to common sense that the water system was not in the best interest of Atkinson, that the actual number of people who were going to be on the hook to repay the loan after operating expenses for the system was not sufficient; that no one had considered the actual cost of bringing “users” up to plumbing codes to receive the public water; that the system would eventually if not sooner bankrupt the town; and that a better option was to join the county water system which is currently being installed county wide under a bond referendum passed four years ago. After that public hearing was closed and the regular town meeting commenced, the mayor dropped a bombshell: The bids were in; and, while expected to be lower than forecast due to the lagging economy, the low bid was actually $800,000.00 higher than expected. I have now been told by an alderman that the original $1,451,000.00 has already been spent for engineering, surveying, two wells, land acquisition (for the water tower), etc. The mayor has gone to the State legislature for more money.

I am currently collecting the names and addresses of all taxpayers in Atkinson in order to send each of them a letter detailing the status of the water system to make sure they know just exactly what is being done to them. Their town is bankrupt, with no water system, and they don’t have a clue. A great many of them are Democrats, due to age and being unaware that their party became the Republican party of 1861

Intel specialists speak out

Rebelnews.org

U. S. war veteran Evan Knappenberger sheds light on the role of army intelligence specialists like himself and his former colleague, Bradley Manning, in the Iraq war.

“I was involved in torture in Iraq. Part of an intel analyst’s job is ‘targeting.’ You take a human being and put him on a piece of paper... You’ve got a grid coordinate of where he lives and a little box that says what to do with him: kill, capture, detain, exploit source,” Knappenberger explained in an interview last month for a PBS Frontline documentary.

“When I worked in targeting, it was having people killed,” the intelligence specialist admitted regarding his missions in Iraq.

Knappenberger went to the same intelligence school as whistleblower Bradley Manning and was assigned to similar duties as Manning in Iraq.

He explains that footage of Iraqi civilians being murdered in cold blood was what prompted Manning to pass on U. S. military intelligence to WikiLeaks.

“He (Manning) had a change of heart...

development of genius in accordance with the organic laws which determine nurture, growth and fruition. Except in its highest form, acting is not an art; but heaven-born genius is no more vocal in an Edwin Booth without long training than a Bonaparte is necessarily a world conqueror without the technique of the artillery school. These two thoughts have the utmost bearing on giving the Jews the control of the theater.

There being no “syndicate,” no pooling, among the Gentile managers of the 80s, they presented their stars or other attractions at rival theaters in competition as individual offerings, and at the end of a reasonable New York run, not forced for “road consumption,” took their companies on a tour of the country. The manager’s whole investment was probably tied up in his enterprise. He thus became a part of his group of artists, sharing their hardships of travel, their joys and sorrows. If business was good they shared the satisfaction; if otherwise, it was sink or swim for one as well as the other. In those days much was heard about troupes traveling “on their trunks.” The stories were not exaggerated, but life had its better side, too. The manager and the actor were daily companions; there was a mutual absorption of ideas; the manager learned to know and appraise the “artistic temperament” – which is a tangible asset when not a form of artificial grouch or congenital ill-nature – and to respect the actor’s point of view, while, reciprocally, the actor was able to place himself in the manager’s position and to get his point of view from close personal affiliation.

around 1947 under Truman. They’re literally “stuck on an escalator” and waiting for the government to help them off.

The bottom line is I will not be forced to waive my right to property without defending myself. While I would very much like for the “Democrats” in Atkinson to get the water system to which they seem to feel they are “entitled,” it will not be done at my expense. They seem to believe that it will all be “free” to them, using other people’s money; but it will not. As in all things, I firmly believe in everyone’s right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; but not at my expense and not at the expense of my children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc., etc., etc. The attitude of this town’s elected officers seems to be that, “We know what is best for you, and we’re here to help.”

Where have I heard that before?

Most of the guys I went through intel school with, who went to Iraq with me, are either dead, killed themselves, are in a long-term care institution or completely disabled. I’m actually 50 percent disabled via PTSD (post traumatic stress disorder).”

Manning, 23, was arrested in June while deployed to war-torn Iraq amid suspicions he had passed a trove of secret U. S. government documents to WikiLeaks, many of which were then published around the world.

State Department spokesman Philip Crowley resigned in March after slamming the Pentagon’s treatment of the soldier, which includes solitary confinement and being forced to sleep naked, as “ridiculous and counterproductive and stupid.”

U. S. President Barack Obama, however, described the Pentagon’s treatment of Manning as appropriate.

Confederates stop running from fired-up NAACP

From the time of its first assaults against Confederate symbols and heritage, the NAACP has held the high ground, the offensive and the “fire.”

By Bill Ivy

Today the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People can lay claim to several victories in their wars on Whites, and more sure to come unless they can be stopped.

Our race has stayed on the defensive when nearing that “battle front,” muttering the phrase, “Heritage, not hate!” Can’t you hear the NAACP’s knees just a-knocking?

If the defenders of Confederate heritage no longer want their marshmallow roasted by the NAACP’s fire, they’ll have to forget that marshmallow phrase and fight fire with fire. The Confederate flag remains flying on South Carolina’s capital grounds, but it was lowered from the capital building’s dome, a victory for the NAACP “offensive action” waged there and another success tucked under its belt! Are today’s defenders of Confederate heritage cut from the same cloth as their ancestors? Are they willing to act and take the high ground, move off the defense and lay hold of the offensive fire?

A very debatable question, but, if “yes,” then the focus of the NAACP’s campaign against Confederate symbols will have no other choice than to retreat in defense of themselves. Have you ever shook up a hen house?

How exactly can we defenders shake up those clucking NAACP agitators and turn their attention from Confederate symbols to defending themselves? By challenging, with offensive fire, the “validity” of their very citizenship status as “citizens of the United States, U. S. citizens.” Here is a “skeleton view” of that fire.

Our States as sovereign republics each settled all questions regarding citizenship for themselves. The United States (Federal government) was a creation, agent/servant, of the member States having agreed upon such a Union, never sovereign but subject to those delegating its officers and without citizenship itself. For “...there is no such thing as a citizen of the United States (U. S. citizen).” — Ex Parte Knowles, 5 Cal., 300, 302, (1855).

By the Congressional Civil Rights Act of 1866 Congress established its so-called “citizen of the United States.” This federal citizen, created outside that “fundamental law” embodied in the U. S. Constitution, was quite an act. Yet those newspapers still free at the time refused to publish the fact. Many States did not honor or recognize the new citizenship status. For them to comply, they — not their delegated servants in the Federal district — must necessarily enter a “new law” into the Constitution. It would be the “14th Amendment.”

“The Fourteenth Amendment creates (establishes) and defines (in law) citizenship of the United States.” — U. S. v. Anthony, 24 Fed., case no. 14,459 (1873).

Question is, though, was the so-called 14th Amendment that created and defined citizenship of the United States, this U. S. citizen status held by those of the NAACP, a “lawful” amendment placed into the Constitution as law of the land? Was that according to the Constitution’s Article V, or the result of another method “outside” Constitutional law? Note: What we have here is not a “racist issue.” It’s a question of established but breached law, and today the “validity” of federal citizenship rests upon this issue alone. So let’s meet the “Mother of the 14 Amendment.”

“The people of the South have rejected the Constitutional Amendment [which was their lawful right under Article V], and therefore we will march upon them and force them to adopt it at the point of the bayonet [Article V doesn’t authorize force] and establish military power over them [Reconstruction Acts, punishment without “Due Process of Law”] until they do adopt it.” — Senator Doolittle, Congressional Globe, 2d ses., 1644 (1867).

The Reconstruction Acts, doing violence against the 5th Amendment’s guarantee of “Due Process for all Americans,” became the “mother” of a “14th Amendment” that supposedly Constitutionalized “citizenship of the United States” (U. S. citizen); but, as violence against the Constitution itself, were illegal. Therefore the “amendment’s” Federal citizenship was illegal as well. See page 497, 3rd paragraph, www.14th-amendment.com/Miscellaneous/Articles/South_Carolina_Law_Review/page_frame.htm, and email kenlittlesr@yahoo.com for your copy of “Thought Provoking.”

Defenders, the time has come to “fight fire with fire.” This is our “high ground.”

N. B. Forrest calling for heritage warriors

Genl. Forrest: “Keep the skeer on ’em.”

There comes a time, when you are called out, for the duty of reply.

By John Peeples

Our Southern brothers have been on the defense way too long, carrying their fight to the front crying, “Heritage, not Hate.” This has zero effect on the NAACP or any other Black activists group. The defenders must take a strong, no-holds-barred action on the offense if they expect to defeat these people.

Bill Ivy’s plan is the 14th Amendment, which is good, but I’d prefer exposing the enemy behind that enemy. For example, who founded the NAACP and when? This front was set up in 1909 by a few very elite Zionist Internationalist Jews and a few elite Blacks. Wealthy Jews (including Julius Rosenwald of Sears, Roebuck) provided most of the financing and much of the organizational ability to start up and run the NAACP. Its presidents continued to be Jews until the 1970s and many of the key players Marxists or outright Communists.

So let us concentrate on this facet of the Zionist Jews’ agenda from 1909 to 2011, and their usage of Black activists to carry out that conspiracy. We must expose the Jewish Anti-Defamation League’s attacks on the Confederate battle flag, the history and culture of our traditional White South.

The following is old news, but it doesn’t hurt to refresh TFF readers’ minds now and again, especially Southern heritage defenders.

An Atlanta Journal-Constitution article on 11/8/99 quoted Deborah Lauter of the

You can choose to remain on the defensive and let the NAACP roast that marshmallow “Heritage not Hate” over the fire they’ve got going, but remember the “cut of cloth” you’ve laid claim to. So let’s “study hard,” get ready and... “Take that high ground.”

The mother of the “14th Amendment,” that gave national/Federal citizenship to the NAACP and its firebrands as “citizens of the United States” (U. S. Citizens), was Congress’ Reconstruction Acts. But there’s a problem. The Judicial branch has never reviewed those Congressional “laws” for their conformity with the established law of the U. S. Constitution.

The offensive high ground for this new turn of events in today’s Information Age surprises many with our revelation that the Reconstruction Acts were punishment, the Jewish ADL’s Southeast regional office as saying, “At the Anti-Defamation League Commission meeting in Atlanta recently, a resolution was passed opposing the use or promotion of the Confederate Flag by any government entity. We firmly believe it also has no place on the campus of an enlightened private university except for the educational purpose of teaching about the Civil War era.”

In an 11/22/99 article in the Marietta (Georgia) Gazette, Jay Kaiman, Southeast regional director of the ADL, was quoted as saying, “The position of the ADL is very clear in that we are against the Confederate (sic) flag as the official symbol of a State. It represents something that is offensive to people. Why have a symbol that is totally offensive to a segment of our population? We support its removal with no apologies. The Confederate Flag symbolizes oppression and causes victimization.”

The ADL’s views on this subject are particularly troubling because of that organization’s activities — as described by Mr. Kaiman in the same article. “We (the ADL) believe that you (the ADL) expose and shed light on hate so we spend a lot of time monitoring the whole menu of hate group activity. We work with law enforcement providing them with the information that we think is relevant in terms of what the trends are in relation to hate group activity.” In other words, the Jewish ADL — deeply biased against the traditional White South — serves as an official spy agency for the U. S. government, tarring whomever it pleases as “hate groups” and passing along those judgments to receptive law-enforcement agencies (federal, State and local) plus the equally-receptive news media and internet. The ADL is a very formidable used by the Zionist Jews against our traditional White South ostensibly in the name of Black civil rights.

Our enemies still have a number of ugly

Constitution’s guarantee of “Due Process of Law” denied, therefore illegal punishment. As Ex Parte Knowles makes clear, “...there is no such thing as a citizen of the United States,” and with that argument widely published the NAACP is off the high ground and on the defense.

Again, read page 497, 3rd paragraph of the above website, and then New Jersey Resolution, footnotes, pages 501-02. Call South Carolina’s Article V Group with any questions at (843) 875-3597, Joel Rorie, Leader/Speaker. Protagonists loyal to your Confederate Heritage: “Unite!” Dixie!

From the ashes of our Southern past, truth arises.

surprises for us. If we don’t resist, they will never cease attacking us. When the ADL and the NAACP finish with the battle flag, they’ll accelerate the already in progress assault on all Confederate statues and memorials across the South demanding that they be destroyed along with Confederate museums, then desire whatever remaining schools and streets named after Confederate heroes also be renamed, and so on ad infinitum.

What makes my blood boil is the public at large accepts the Black activist/Marxist/Communist charge that our ancestors were an evil people, and that present-day White Southerners have no right to celebrate their history, culture and values.

The NAACP and smaller Black civil rights organizations such as Jesse Jackson’s various groups expend most of their spleen against the culture of Traditional Southern Whites as a people.

That’s why it is so important for our own Southern heritage brothers to stop ducking and take the offense — attack!

Dr. Michael Hill has set an example by challenging Jesse Jackson to debate him as

Woman chokes elderly Walmart greeter

By Adam Mawson
amawson@MorningJournal.com

ELYRIA, Ohio – A pregnant woman and her mother were both arrested after the mother allegedly choked a 71-year-old Wal-Mart greeter and the daughter threatened to blow up the store Saturday, according to an Elyria police report.

According to witnesses, Ashley Jackson, 21, and Toni Duncan, 49, both of Elyria, were at Wal-Mart, 1000 Chestnut Commons Drive, to have a gift card reloaded and a money order sent away. After the clerk at the customer service desk did not help them, they got mad and walked away.

The pair went to leave but were stopped by the greeter, a 71-year-old Sheffield Lake man, who asked for their receipt. Jackson and Duncan said they didn’t have it and yelled obscenities at the man, calling him a “cracker.”

Duncan then pushed a cart into the greeter, grabbed his throat and began choking him, according to the report.

As employees broke up the fight, Jackson went back to the customer service desk and threatened to punch the clerk in the face. She also said that when she tells her boyfriend about the greeter, he won’t be alive, the report stated.

Before leaving the store, Jackson yelled “I’m going to blow up Wal-Mart.”

As officers arrived, Jackson was inside a black Pontiac and Duncan was standing outside of it accusing store employees of harassing her. Police asked her what happened but she refused to answer. When they specifically asked if she threatened to blow up the store, Jackson replied, “Yeah, I did, so there!”

They were both arrested and brought to the Elyria Police Department where Duncan admitted to choking the greeter. She added she wanted to charge the employees at Wal-Mart for harassing her.

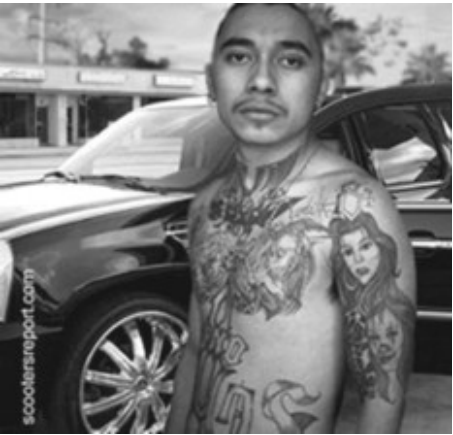

Jackson was charged with inducing panic and aggravated menacing and Duncan was charged with assault. Because Jackson was pregnant and had two small children with her, both women were released on a summons for Elyria Municipal Court, the report stated.

Diversity teaches tolerance

Guadalupe, Arizona – In this small town south of Phoenix, Manuel Renaldo is one of those having decided to punish Arizona by leaving. Caught loading the stolen car seen here with his belongings and family of ten, Renaldo made his thoughts known to our reporter through an interpreter: “It’s a matter of principle. I’ll not be supported by a State that treats me like a criminal.”

Illegal immigrants have recently begun boycotting Arizona by the thousands, their outrage substantially increased since that State’s controversial new SB-1070 law is seen by them as blatantly racist. Profiling themselves as having vastly strengthened Arizona with more diversity than a simple Gringo can appreciate, and offended with all the new racial profiling, they’re driving elsewhere.

Businesses have already begun feeling the effects of this exodus. Arizona retailers report dwindling sales of beer, spray paint and ammunition. Also hit quite hard are the State’s hospitals, all of them suffering a dramatic decline in births and emergency room visits. Tattoo parlors have also gone into a state of panic.

Renaldo rendered his case unmistakably clear through the interpreter: He and his children “are moving to California, a State that will support me and my family with a lot more dignity.”

Kind of brings a tear to your eyes... huh?

Border Patrol told: don’t bother

By Jeff Davis
whitcivilrights.com

The United States government seems to have formalized its longstanding unofficial policy of doing nothing significant to control illegal immigration in this country.

A Fox News article reports: “An Arizona sheriff says U. S. Border Patrol officials have repeatedly told him they have been ordered to reduce – at times even stop – arrests of illegal immigrants caught trying to cross the U. S. border. Cochise County Sheriff Larry Dever told FoxNews.com that a supervisor with the U. S. Border Patrol told him as recently as last month that the federal agency’s office on Arizona’s southern border was under orders to keep apprehension numbers down during specific reporting time periods. ‘The senior supervisor agent is telling me about how their mission is now to scare people back,’ Dever said in an interview with Fox News. He said, ‘I had to go back to my guys and tell them not to catch anybody, that their job is to chase people away. ... They were not to catch anyone, arrest anyone. Their job was to set up posture, to intimidate people, to get them to go back.’”

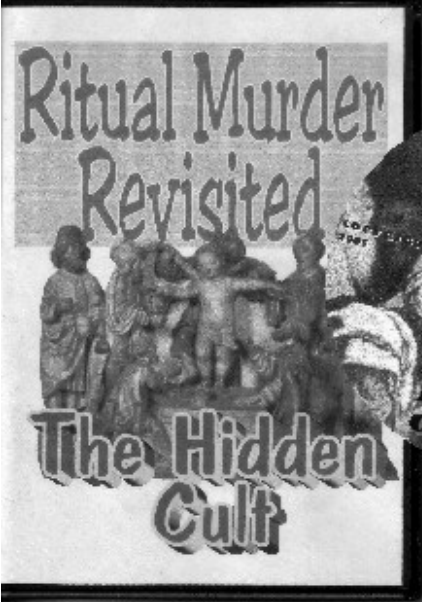

And how well will that work now that the cat is out of the bag? It sounds like a Mexican family of 20 could just stroll right by the Border Patrol, and they’re under orders not to arrest them.

The article continues “Dever’s charges were vigorously denied by a commander with the U. S. Customs and Border Protection. In recent days, Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano has said the U. S.-Mexican border is more secure than ever, and Homeland Security officials have used recent statistics to support those claims.”

If they’re comparing the Border Patrol under Obama with its performance under George W. Bush, that will only prove that both of those crooks failed to enforce immigration law and betrayed America.

Why Do Some People Dislike Jews?

Why do people dislike Jews? This is a question that is seldom asked; and, if any answer is given, the typical explanation is simply “hatred.” Yet, even in such cases where that explanation is acceptable, we know hatred is indeed based on something – even if that “something” is nonsense. In perhaps the first time ever, this documentary traces anti-Semitism to its earliest claimed manifestations and follows it through time to the present. In a novel approach to the subject, this documentary attempts objectivity. Still, it does not seek to condone Jewish antipathy; the video merely documents many reasons why it exists, showing nearly every conceivable justification for its continued existence by non-Jews. And it does this in an even-handed approach that refutes such hatred based on stereotypes, with examples of Jews who do not toe-the-line to fracture such ideas.

Jewish Ritual Murder Revisited The Hidden Cult

A new documentary about the original “true crime” once again sends shock-waves to the ADL, where they’re probably trying to determine different ways to suppress the First Amendment in an effort to prevent this video from gaining widespread attention. About an hour and 15 minutes in length, it contains considerably less information than the original video, yet this one is completely re-made, using more modern video-creation techniques and it includes many, many more images of paintings, etc. from Europe that suggest such crimes have been perpetrated by a bitter, extremist sect of the Jewish faith. Additionally, a doctor who has studied the subject goes on record about his findings while studying this controversial topic. You’ll be shocked to hear what he uncovers.

They come in buses
And Ford trucks,
I buy big house
With welfare bucks.
They come here,
We live together,
More welfare checks,
It just gets better!
Fourteen families,
They moving in,
But neighbor’s patience
Wearing thin.
Finally, White guy
Moves away,
I buy his house,
And then I say,
“Find more aliens
For house to rent.”
In my yard
I put up tent.
Send for family
They just trash,
But they, too,
Draw welfare cash!
Everything very good,
Soon we own
Whole neighborhood.
We have hobby
It called breeding,
Welfare pay
For baby feeding.
Kids need dentist?
Wife need pills?
We get free!
And got no bills!
TAXPAYER crazy!
He pay all year,
To keep welfare
Running here.
We think America
Darn good place!
Too darn good

The international psychopaths’ war games have gone live again – “staging” a “humanitarian war” against “Southland” under their imaginary UN Security Council Resolution 3003.

By Prof. Michel Chossudovsky
globalresearch.ca

Military operations of this size and magnitude are never improvised. The war on Libya as well as the armed insurrection were planned months prior to the Arab protest movement... “No Fly Zone” under UN Security Council Resolution 1973: A “Humanitarian War” is Launched.

We were led to believe that the protest movement in Egypt and Tunisia had spread to Libya.

The insurrection in Libya was presented as a spontaneous uprising, a pro-democracy wave of activism which had swept the Arab World.

Next we were led to think “the international community” had decided in response to these unfolding events to “protect the lives of civilians” and refer the matter to the United Nations Security Council. The media then reported that it was only once the U. N. Security Council had adopted Resolution 1973, that the U. S. and NATO member countries took the decision to intervene militarily in Libya under the “No Fly Zone”...

- The war on Libya was known and decided well in advance.
- Military planning was in “an advanced stage of readiness.”
- U. N. security council resolution 1973 pertaining to Libya was already on the drawing board, months prior to the onset of the “pro-democracy” insurrection in eastern Libya. ...

Read carefully what’s inside quotation marks as earlier reported and here repeated, “The Southern Mistral 2011” War Games Scenario:

On November 2, 2010, more than four months prior to the onset of Operation Odyssey Dawn, France and the U. K. had announced the conduct of war games under Operation “Southern Mistral 2011” against “an imaginary country” designated “Southland,” living under a “dictatorship” which allegedly “was responsible for an attack against France’s national interests.”

The Franco-British (humanitarian) air operation against “Southland” was to be carried out pursuant to imaginary “United Nations Security Council Resolution No. 3003.”

The war games were scheduled to start on March 21, 2011. These Franco-British war games never took place. Operation “Southern Mistral” went live on March 19, 2011 (two days prior to the scheduled date).

The above “Southern Mistral 2011” is the exact quote and image taken from the Franco-British war games website which is hosted by France’s Air Force. It states:

“SOUTHLAND: Dictatorship responsible for an attack against France’s national interests.

“FRANCE : Makes the decision to show its determination to SOUTHLAND (under United Nations Security council resolution n° 3003).

“UNITED-KINGDOM: Allied country as determined in the bilateral agreement. The United Kingdom supports France through the deployment of its air assets.” (Commandement de la défense aérienne et des opérations aériennes, Southern Mistral 2011: Scenario)

The war games were scheduled to take place from the 21st to 25 March 2011.

“Six Royal Air Force Tornado GR4s, one tanker Vickers VC-10 and one Boeing E3D will be deployed together with French Air force Mirage 2000Ds, 2000Ns and 2000Cs operating with a fleet of around thirty aircraft including helicopters, Boeing tankers and Awacs radar aircraft.

“Air Raid Southern Storm will be commanded and controlled by the National Air Operations Centre (CNOA) of Lyon Mont-Verdun air base (BA 942).

“An Air Operations Cell deployed at Nancy air base (BA 133) will follow in real time all the air missions and reproduce the air raids.

“Simultaneously, Paratrooper Commando Air 20 (CPA20) will receive its British counterpart in Dijon: the RAF Regiment. Together they will train for air base protection missions on operational theatres in compliance with what is achieved today in Afghanistan.

“Furthermore, RAF Regiment members will train in Captieux to helicopters’ air policing measures. These specific procedures are implemented on a daily basis by the Quick reaction Alert FAF air defence helicopters to intervene against ‘slow movers.’”

Welcome to Southern Mistral 2011. “An adapted scenario was developed for the exercise.

“Based on Western geography, France mostly, an imaginary country was created: SOUTHLAND. An artificial border was drawn inside France to simulate this country.

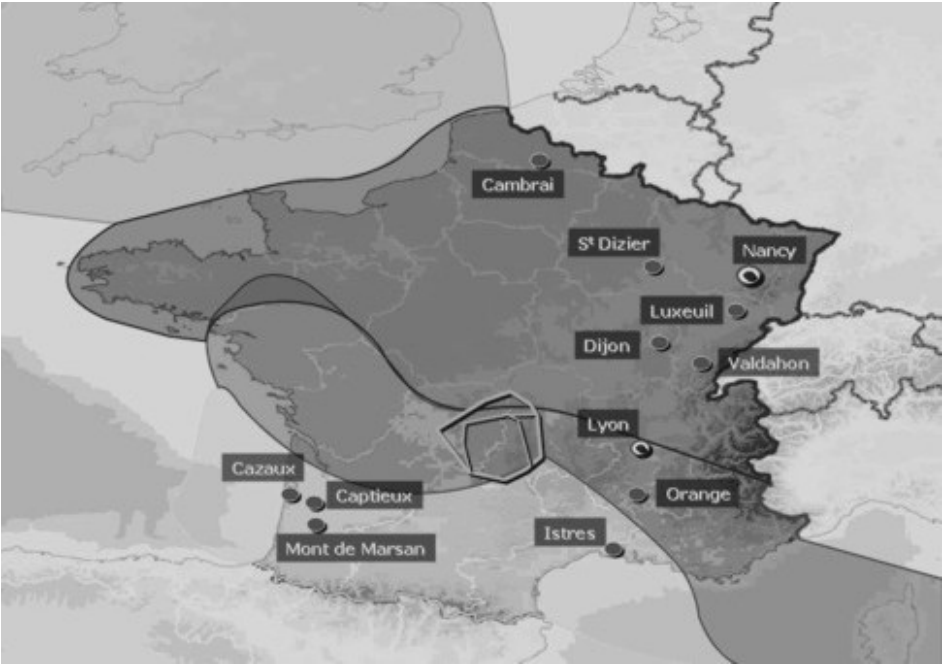

“SOUTHLAND: Dictatorship responsible for an attack against France’s national interests.

“FRANCE: Makes the decision to show its determination to SOUTHLAND (under United Nations Security council resolution n° 3003).

“UNITED-KINGDOM: Allied country as determined in the bilateral agreement. The United Kingdom supports France through the deployment of its air assets.

“NAVARRE: Allied country giving clearance to French and British aircraft to overfly its territory.”

(See Commandement de la défense aérienne et des opérations aériennes, Operation Southern Mistral: Scenario)
These Franco-British war games never took place. Operation “Southern Mistral” went live on March 19, 2011 against “Southland.”

“OPERATION SOUTHERN MISTRAL” = “Operation Odyssey Dawn”
“SOUTHLAND” = “Libya”
“Security Council Resolution 3003” = “Security Council Resolution 1973”
“DICTATORSHIP” = “Qadhaffi Regime”

Under the war games scenario Security Council Resolution 3003 was proposed by France, whereas “the real life” U. N. Security Council Resolution 1973 was proposed by France, the U. K. and Lebanon.

The only difference of substance is that “Southland” (a.k.a. Libya), the so-called imaginary Southern country for the war games, was inserted inside the territory of Southern France (See Map above. Navarre, that is, “Navarra,” designates a region of Northern Spain).

The actual location of this imaginary Southern country called “Southland” was not really an issue, because the war games were postponed...

The French Air Force announced (in English) the “Suspension of exercise Southern Mistral 2011 [against Southland]...

Due to the current international events [bombing of Libya], Exercise Southern Mistral has been suspended.” Suspension of Exercise Southern Mistral 2011: The French version uses the term Mise en veille which means “put on standby” (Mise en veille de l’Exercice Southern Mistral 2011). The operation was not “put on standby.” Those British and French war planes which were to be deployed as part of Operation “Southern Mistral” including France’s Mirage 2000 and Britain’s Tornado GR4A were sent to bomb Libya.

France’s Mirage 2000 used in Operation Odyssey Dawn against Libya, slated to be

And see Royal Air Force Tornado GR4A scheduled to go into the Southern Mistral war games against “Southland” above.

What about these war games, the attacks on Libya and United Nations Security council resolutions 3003 and 1973?...

Military operations of this size and magnitude are never improvised. The war on Libya as well as the armed insurrection were planned months prior to the Arab protest movement. In the words of Rep. Denis Kucinich:

“While war games are not uncommon, the similarities between ‘Southern Mistral’ and ‘Operation Odyssey Dawn’ highlight just how many unanswered questions remain regarding our own military planning for Libya.

“The ‘Southern Mistral’ war games called for Great Britain-French air strikes against an unnamed dictator of a fictional country, ‘Southland.’ The pretend attack was authorized by a pretend United Nations Security Council Resolution. The ‘Southern Mistral’ war games were set for March 21-25, 2011. On March 19, 2011, the United States joined France and Great Britain in an air attack against Muammar Gaddafi’s Libya pursuant to U. N. Security Council Resolution 1973.”

9/11 the Achilles’ Heel of the two-party system

By James Buchanan
whitecivilrights.com

9/11 is the Achilles’ heel of the two-party system as long as we have the guts to go after them on this issue. Opinion polls show that a vast majority of Americans aren’t buying the government explanation for 9/11. One article from 2008 pointed out that a “Scientific Poll (shows that) 84% Reject Official 9/11 Story (and) Only 16% now believe official fable according to New York Times/CBS News poll... A monumental new scientific opinion poll has emerged which declares that only 16% of people in America now believe the official government explanation of the September 11th 2001 terror attacks. According to the new New York Times/CBS News poll, only 16% of Americans think the government is telling the truth about 9/11 and the intelligence prior to the attacks... The 84% figure mirrors other recent polls on the same issue. A Canadian Poll put the figure at 85%. A CNN poll had the figure at 89%. Over 80% supported the stance... (claiming) 9/11 as an inside job...”

So the people supporting the official government explanation for 9/11 are not only in the minority; they are a small minority making up only 16 percent of the most gullible portion of the population or people who are paid to say that they believe in the official 9/11 story like our politicians and government operatives.

Over the years, evidence has steadily built up making the government account less and less believable for anyone willing to keep up on the investigations by Americans with various technical expertise, who have been willing to donate their time to get at the truth. One of the first glaring signs that something was not right was the collapse of the 47-story world trade Center Building number 7. This building had not been hit by an airplane, but went down perfectly straight just like a controlled demolition. This is still seen as one of the most glaring inconsistencies and has woken up a great many people.

If Building 7 had been secretly set up with explosive charges to collapse it, then that raises the question whether or not the twin towers were also secretly set up with explosives. Both of the twin towers came down into their own footprints just like controlled demolitions. Add to that, a great quantity of thermite dust that was found in the debris suggesting that explosives were used to cut through the steel columns. Some columns at ground zero were photographed which had clean 45 degree cuts consistent with a controlled demolition.

Add to all this an ex-president of Italy; Francesco Cossiga has told the respected Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera that “the disastrous (9/11) attack was planned and realized by the American CIA and Mossad with the help of the Zionist world to put under accusation the Arabic Countries and to persuade the Western powers to intervene in Iraq and Afghanistan.”

Another article notes that Dr. Alan Sabrosky, a former director of the Army War College, also stated publicly that 9/11 was an inside job by traitors within our nation and the Mossad.

Another source notes that Israel was caught trying to set up an al Qaeda cell in Palestine just weeks after 9/11. Israel has always objected to the U. S. having friendly relations with any Muslim nations. Egypt and Saudia Arabia are two of the friendliest nations with the U. S. Curiously, almost all the 9/11 hijackers came from those two nations. The Israeli Mossad could have set up additional phony al Qaeda cells to recruit all of the 9/11 hijackers.

Israel, by the way, tried to sour U. S. relations with some false flag bombings in the 1950s in the Lavon Affair. Israel also attempted to sink a U. S. intelligence ship (the USS Liberty) in 1967 without survivors, probably intending to blame that attack on Egypt.

One website – ae911truth.org – is made up of over 1,200 engineers and architects who question the official 9/11 story. One list of points about the twin tower collapse from that website includes:

1. Destruction proceeds through the path of greatest resistance at nearly free-fall acceleration
2. Improbable symmetry of debris distribution
3. Extremely rapid onset of destruction
4. Over 100 first responders reported explosions and flashes
5. Multi-ton steel sections ejected laterally
6. Mid-air pulverization of 90,000 tons of concrete and metal decking
7. Massive volume of expanding pyroclastic-like clouds
8. 1200-foot-diameter debris field: no “pancaked” floors found
9. Isolated explosive ejections 20 - 40 stories below demolition front
10. Total building destruction: dismemberment of steel frame
11. Several tons of molten metal found under all three high-rises
12. Evidence of thermite incendiaries found by FEMA in steel samples
13. Evidence of explosives found in dust samples....

Don’t let them put these facts down the memory hole

Your telephone answering machine message might begin with:

- “9/11 was an inside job...”
- “Israel and treasonous gentiles did 9/11...”
- “The official story of 9/11 is a big lie...”
- “Israel – not Islam – did 9/11...”

List of personal actions

1. Always wear a 9/11 Truth button on your outer garment. (I wear one on my 9/11 Truth tee-shirt, my long-sleeve shirt over the tee and the jacket or coat covering the other two, always hanging my coat so that the button is conspicuously exposed.)
2. Place 9/11 Truth stickers, cards and signs all around the inside and outside of your house or apartment. (I have posted numerous 9/11 Truth stickers on the fronts and backs of my several vehicles for over five years now and suffered no vandalism to any one of them during this half a decade period. Numerous people asking about an explanation accept my literature and DVDs to help answer their questions.)
3. Place 9/11 Truth cards and literature in the coffee table books at your doctors’ and dentists’ offices and the like. They will stay in place for a long time and be read by many before they’re discarded.
4. Put 9/11 Truth message return address stickers on shopping carts and gas pumps, table magazines and newspapers, telephone poles and handrails. Easily removed, they are basically erasable graffiti viewed by many in the meantime and do no damage.
5. Inscribe a 9/11 Truth remark of your choosing in #2 lead pencil on the bottom margin of all of the folding money that passes through your hands, and put your favorite Truth web site address on the end margins of the bills. Such messages are erasable and thus do no damage to the bill. This is like writing a comment in the dust on the back of a car or van window, yet it is viewed and becomes a topic of discussion to many of those reading it.

6. Always keep some DVDs, Truth cards and literature on hand for anyone who expresses an interest in the subject. It is best to strike while the iron is hot.

7. Continue to pass along such messages as this to your “down-line.” That is how our movement grows.

8. Use every opportunity to “bring the subject up” when it presents itself. Remember, you know many, many things about 9/11 that others of the general public are completely unaware of and need to investigate. Even those you might expect to reject your ideas out of hand often show an avid interest.

9. Don’t slack off. We are exerting a profound effect on our nation and thus the world. The MSM covers this fact up with deafening silence, but we are changing the world. We will unlikely ever get any credit for what we’ve accomplished, but that is not why we do this.

10. Continue accepting other Truthers as genuine even if their perceptions of the Truth vary in some ways from your own. All who are legitimately working for a real and in-depth criminal investigation into the crime of 9/11 are on our side and they may be right and we wrong in some particulars. Only the investigation and criminal case can hope to get at the Truth.

11. Continue to study and learn about the events of that day and related subjects. Others find the depth and breadth of our knowledge impressive and thus possibly credible.

12. Don’t give up. It is frequently the last cast of the day that catches the biggest fish.

Display banners around your home or business. Place signs in the yard.

Here is simple, inspired wording for a sign that fits on a sheet of paper that you might feel like carrying on the street for the time being, pasting up and around, posting, maybe improving upon, perhaps adding a second sign or still more with 911 Truth; and, assuming you are annoyed like me with the Big Lie still alive and well, carry along a stash of 911 DVDs.

TRUTH REQUIRES BLAMING CHENEY FOR 911

NOT ISLAM & ARABS

or on legal size paper:

TRUTH REQUIRES BLAMING CHENEY FOR 911, NOT ISLAM & ARABS

Possible subsequent sign ideas:

Cheney cooked up 911, with Rumsfeld, Bush Senior, and Myth-Master Zelikow, cynically choosing 911 as a date that stands for danger, emergency, terror!

Nano-thermite spray particles found in all the extremely fine 911 dust samples proves 911 was U. S. government psychological warfare against its own citizens for establishing Police State Rule by Fear rigging WTC Towers and Building 7 to come down for maximum shock and awe.

Salehi: Iran, Egypt keen to enhance ties

rebelnews.com

IRAN’S FOREIGN MINISTER Ali Akbar Salehi says the Islamic Republic and Egypt are keen on developing their current level of relations.

“Both sides are keen to develop the current level of ties. This process would take time but I hope that would happen soon,” Salehi said on the sidelines of a ceremony in Pakistan’s Embassy in Tehran, Fars news agency reported.

Talking about the possibility of opening embassies in Tehran and Cairo, Salehi said, “When our (diplomatic) relations are developed to the level of ambassador, surely embassies will be opened.”

Republic from the Egyptian Foreign Ministry, which underlined Cairo’s commitment to improving its long-frozen relations with Tehran.

Following the ouster of its pro-Western President Hosni Mubarak, the post-revolution Egypt looks poised to turn a new page in its relations with the Islamic Republic, Egyptian Foreign Minister Nabil al-Arabi foreseeing a new phase of relations between the two Muslim nations.

Iran severed ties with Egypt after Cairo signed the 1978 Camp David Accords with the Israeli regime and offered asylum to Iran’s deposed monarch Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

“Sanctions made Iran self-sufficient”

rebelnews.org

Iran’s president has downplayed the West’s sanctions against the Islamic Republic, saying they have caused Iran to achieve self-sufficiency in various fields.

“Thank God that the enemies put sanctions on us,” IRNA quoted Mahmoud Ahmadinejad as saying on April 19 at the opening ceremony of Tehran University’s Faculty of Modern Sciences and Technologies.

Ahmadinejad recalled the country’s leap last year for self-sufficiency in the field of gasoline production after unilateral sanctions by the U. S. and its Western allies targeted the country’s oil and gas sector.

“As soon as they told us ‘We won’t sell gasoline to you,’ we started producing petrol inside the country and in fact moved toward utmost self-sufficiency,” he said.

The chief of Iran’s executive body highlighted the need for the country to make progress in all fields to become “a model” for other nations in the world.

“If a nation is at the top from a cultural point of view but in the rear regarding lifestyle, its best ideas will not sell in the world because comprehensive progress serves as proof to a nation’s righteousness and values,” he pointed out.

Ahmadinejad also insisted that the Iranian nation enjoys unrivaled potentials and capacities.

“I believe that the world standard in no field is out of reach of Iranian talents and that we need to move ahead,” he said.

An idea whose time has come

Introducing the Utah Sound Money Act

In 1980, Zimbabwe became a sovereign African nation, gaining its independence from the United Kingdom. At that time, their dollar was valued at a higher rate than the U. S. dollar, at a rate of 1 to 1.25. Earlier this decade, President Mugabe – in power since 1987 – began to fulfill a long-standing campaign promise to equalize land ownership, through a campaign called Fast Track Land Reform. While White Zimbabweans constituted less than 1% of the population, they owned around 70% of the land. In 2000, Mugabe began to seize and redistribute land owned by Whites to Black Zimbabweans.

The economy quickly tanked in response to these moves, as well as the resulting sanctions imposed by several Western nations. That year it declined by five percent, then by eight percent in 2001, then twelve percent in 2002. Inflation quickly surpassed normal percentages and increased into the tens, then hundreds, then thousands, and then like an asymptote, skyrocketed towards infinity. At its highest rate, Zimbabwe’s inflation reached a monthly high of nearly 80 billion percent.

I carry in my wallet one of the most potent objects that can be used in teaching others the nature and importance of sound money: a 100 Trillion Zimbabwe Dollar note – the highest amount ever printed.

In the months prior to the collapse of their currency, Zimbabweans began using foreign currencies as a more stable medium of exchange. The government was quickly forced to legalize such alternative currencies, first licensing hundreds of businesses to sell their wares in foreign currency, and later suspending their currency altogether, legalizing the foreign currencies themselves for use in the country. Gold has become a coveted commodity as individuals look for a more reliable currency with which to engage in commerce.

Zimbabwe is just the latest of a long string of failed fiat currencies. A currency need not undergo hyperinflation, however, to be rendered worthless. Since its inception in 1913, the Federal Reserve Note (“U. S. Dollar”) has lost 96% of its value through a steady (and sinisterly mis-reported) inflation.

As with Zimbabwe, countries with central banks seek to enforce their monopoly on creation (counterfeiting) of the official currency through legal tender laws. In other words, alternative currencies are outlawed as a medium of payment; the legalization of competing currencies would, through the open market, result in the government losing its monopoly and ending up with a “continental”-like pile of paper with little to no value. (So concerned were the early leaders of the United States with this issue [they had learned from personal experience] that the U. S. Coinage Act of 1792 instituted the death penalty for anybody found counterfeiting the currency.)

Whether hyperinflation is in the future for the Federal Reserve Note or not, its eventual demise is near certain. Positioning ourselves through preparation and wise financial management to proactively respond to such events on the horizon is wise counsel – should not the same apply to our government?

Last year, Rep. Ron Paul (R-TX) introduced the Free Competition in Currency Act which would, in his words, “allow for competing currencies [which would] allow market participants to choose a currency that suits their needs, rather than the needs of the government.” Gold, silver, or any other form of currency would be acceptable under this proposal for engaging in commerce.

While we wait for the federal government to do nothing to stem the tide of Federal Reserve Notes that will likely soon capsize our ship of State, States can, like individuals, position themselves to proactively prepare for any problem with the dollar, rather than later be forced to react under troublesome circumstances. Article I Section 10 of the U. S. Constitution says that “No State shall... make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts...” Additionally, no power was delegated in the Constitution to allow for the federal government to make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender for commerce. That this limitation has long been ignored is no excuse for its ongoing abuse.

In the 2011 general legislative session, Utahns will have an opportunity to position themselves and their State on better financial footing by infusing the system with sound money – to the degree that willing participants choose to use either gold or silver as alternative currencies. The Utah Sound Money Act will soon be introduced to initiate this opportunity.

This bill is designed to reinstate gold and silver coin as an optional medium of exchange for use in commerce within the state of Utah. It nullifies legal tender laws for intrastate commerce, recognizing the inherent, inalienable right of individuals to engage in specie-based exchanges with each other on mutually agreeable terms.

The bill goes further. Among other things:

- exempts gold and silver from sales and

This man challenged the beast most of us fear to mention.

DVD documentary “Off Your Knees, Germany!” features Ingrid Zündel telling how her husband, Ernst, was politically kidnapped with the help of the Patriot Act, a story as dramatic as they come, about a man who dug in his heels and stayed put.

Four governments on three continents in a clandestine operation tried to silence one lone dissident taking on the brutest forces on earth. Why? Quite simply: He forcefully spoke Truth to Power.

Gordon Duff: “If Ernst Zündel had been left alone, his research would’ve proven right or wrong, acceptable or not. Instead, vast powers were marshaled to crush a man whose crime, and it is now considered a crime, don’t be uncertain of that, is to seek the simple truth.

“There were two tests, one of Zündel’s courage. He passed. The other was of ours. We failed in our silence. Paraphrasing Pastor Martin Niemöller:

“First they came for Ernst Zündel and I didn’t speak out because I wasn’t Ernst Zündel... then they came for me and there was no one left to speak out for me.”

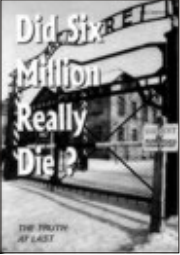

“If you don’t think they have come for you, for your family, your children, open your eyes and look around. The enemies of Ernst Zündel are the enemies of mankind. See what silence has bought.”

“Off Your Knees, Germany!” is on YouTube and some ten other websites as a precaution because it will be censored. It’s 90 minutes long and comes in seven parts.

Ingrid: “Both my husband and I come from a pacifist background. Never have we transgressed against the laws of either Canada or the United States, where we have lived for more than half a century as law-abiding citizens. Yet both of us are deemed so ‘dangerous’ that Ernst has been banned for 20 years from coming back to live with me, and I can’t join him in my homeland, Germany; more than a dozen EU countries have an arrest warrant out against me. What have we done? Witnessed for Historical Truth as we found it.”

capital gains tax when used in intrastate commerce;

- provides standing for Utah court declaratory relief from intrusive federal regulation;
- outlaws searches and seizures, as well as disclosure, of gold and silver coin without a lawful warrant from the county sheriff;
- makes use of the long-defunct Utah State Defense Force to store, safeguard, protect, and transport Utah’s specie holdings;
- allows any Utah taxpayer to discharge his/her financial obligations to the State government in gold or silver coin;
- establishes cooperatives (LLCs) to facilitate and promote intrastate commerce using gold and silver coin; and
- allows for this increase in liberty at no direct nor initial cost to the state of Utah.

This bill does nothing to the federal government’s use of Federal Reserve Notes and monopoly over creating that fiat currency. This bill does not impose a gold standard, nor remove the dollar as a legal tender to be used in commerce. This bill does not do anything, really, other than increase the liberty of each individual to determine how he would like to engage in commerce, and with what currency.

This is not to say that the language or implementation of the bill is perfect. I’ve had the opportunity to review the draft for several weeks and offer input to the author, and I have to say, the bill is fairly solid. Nonetheless, improvements may yet be suggested and incorporated – and that would be a good thing. But considering the state of the dollar, the liberty-suppressing imposition of legal tender laws, and the stranglehold over commerce (interstate or otherwise), this idea is one whose time is come.

Have you noticed that the Japanese, in a country dedicated to cremation, can’t keep up with ten thousand additional bodies for cremation? They are burying the dead, only to dig them up weeks or months later for cremation. How are we to believe the Germans cremated six million in such a short period of time? It must have been a miracle. Maybe you could do a story on it.

NEVER AGAIN

Since the Veterans Administration has made a veteran remove his battle flag from his hospital room in Tennessee, the only logical conclusion I can draw from this as a veteran of the U. S. Armed Forces is, stop serving in the military of the American Empire. Besides, unless this country gets attacked and war is declared by Congress, you’ll be fighting and dying for the United Nations as a part of its American military arm in every “peace keeping mission” around the world. None of which have any direct bearing on this country’s security or your rights and freedoms. As a citizen of the Great State of Alabama, should foreign troops land at Mobile Bay and head in my direction, I would take up arms in defense of America but only as a Southern Partisan and never again as a serviceman in the U. S. military.

BREADWINNER

I was speaking to an emergency room physician this morning. He told me that a woman in her 20s came to the ER with her 8th pregnancy. She stated, “My momma told me that I am the breadwinner for the family.” He asked her to explain. She said that she can make babies, and babies get money for the family. It goes like this: The grandma calls the Department of Child and Family Services and states that the unemployed daughter is not capable of caring for these children. DCFS agrees and states that the child or children will need to go to foster care.

The grandma then volunteers to be the foster parent, and thus receives a check for $1,500 per child per month in Illinois. Total yearly income: $144,000 tax-free, not to mention free health care (Medicaid) plus a monthly card entitling her to free groceries, etc, and a voucher for 250 free cell phone minutes per month. This does not even include WIC and other welfare programs. Indeed, grandma was correct in that her fertile daughter is the “breadwinner” for the family. This is how the ruling class spends our tax dollars.

EDITOR’S NOTE

The final volume of Gregory Kay’s “Third Revolution” Saga entitled The Warlord is now out. It may take some weeks before his latest makes it onto Amazon’s listings, but this 673-page book and all of his others (available in both hardcopy and download), are at http://www.lulu.com/gregmkay .

INFORMED

I receive three conservative newspapers and all of them are impressive. Keep up this outstanding work. Wider circulation of such news, unavailable in the lamestream press, is much needed to open minds and hearts in our combat with the liberal media, the public schools and universities.

Many people have seen movies put out over the years by Hollywood. In a lot of these movies the German people, Nazis, Skinheads, KKK, the Southern people, the White race and the Arab people have been portrayed or shown in a bad light.

Have you ever seen a movie put out by Hollywood that has portrayed or shown the Jew or Jewish people or the country of Israel in a bad light? Can you name one? If so, what is the title? Making a point.

EYE OPENER

Apathetic folks, especially the younger ones, can’t be held completely responsible for their ignorance because the conspirators have held sway for so long, mesmerizing and brainwashing their prey. How should they know an obscenely-rich elite minority is to blame for the demise of this former super-power when the latter own, edit and censor the media, dominate public education and exploit the Hollywood cesspool to ridicule moral absolutes?

Well, now there is a documentary movie that lays bare those subversive traitors who are within spitting distance of delivering a coup de grace to Uncle Sam. Nope! I never would have believed it, except I have seen it with my own eyes. It is titled “INSIDE JOB” and is readily available on DVD. I cannot be too enthusiastic in urging all readers of The First Freedom to avail themselves of this amazingly uninhibited exposé of the forces of evil that hate America and strive for its total destruction. When you see the names and faces and hear the arrogant voices of the “stars” of this video, either you will be boiling with rage... or you are brain dead.

SOLUTION

The control of television and the media in general has become an extremely toxic weapon used explicitly against our folk.

A simple process can help in overcoming any obstacle. First you must identify the problem, then find its cause and a solution is much easier to attain. In this instance the problem is Jews. The cause of this problem is their belief that we are their servants as their religion teaches them. So we have to ask ourselves, how far are we willing to go to defend our freedom, liberty and right to make our own choices? Not have certain options to choose from, but unlimited ones. Your instincts don’t tell you to submit and obey what a Jew deems appropriate and acceptable. A Jew’s allegiance has never been and never will be to the USA.

Let us convert every disappointment into renewed effort, see each challenge as an opportunity to state where we’re coming from without fear of the media. Please tell your SCV camp to stop posing for them; they’ll continue attacking our White culture no matter what we do.

We’re surrounded, they’re exposed and the end is near “One nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all” rings dreamily idealistic in a public schoolroom full of children getting their young minds massaged to accept further instructions from the only tribe on earth that’s truly monolithic. People born into it cannot secede; others need not apply for entry therein; but, anyone agreeing to deceive his own by helping propagate its agenda in Goyim nests worldwide is guaranteed at least the interim wages of sin. Media and political “facilitators” of that ilk become court favorites, symbiotic relatives faking the roles assigned them by phony Zionism.

The First Freedom’s Wicked Warren Wilson wants to know: “What’s with that rash of purple and lavender ties worn by Fox anchors, analysts and pundits?” My guess, it’s their latest assault upon a public having nothing better to do than watch TV.

When former Hollywood Screen Actors Guild President Ronald Reagan did his act with most of the White House press corps in supporting roles, those Typical Media Flunkies initially came on the set in scenes one and two wearing red ties and outfits. But, by part three, the new U. S. President and his bride showed up likewise. At the time still tolerating TV myself, I thought it a battle of wits between the administration and that coterie of subversives, only years later crediting actor extraordinaire Reagan, one of them all along, with such diabolical genius. If amazed, my older readers might peruse Gregory Kay’s “The Reagan sacred cow,” www.firstfreedom.net/29.htm .

A newcomer admires this newspaper’s humor while advising it shouldn’t “bunch” people together but judge each individual by the color of his principles; practically the same as saying: stop being what attracts most late arrivals to The First Freedom and sip the multicultural Kool Aid.

First-time readers of “alternate” media (different from the “normal” stuff they’re comfortable with) must help us eccentrics “get over it.” Like Dixie’s latest escapees from the enlightened North wishing only to emancipate “racists” and traditionalists from our hangups, they can’t abide such old-fashioned nitpicking as the foregoing paragraph’s “sexism,” an archaism calling for gramatically-correct pronoun numbers, a generic “his” where the “less offensive” “their,” as taught in publik skuls, would do nicely.

“Profiling,” and the mediacracy’s other cute rant, naming those who won’t dip into its punch bowl “racists,” is a sedative that we who stay alert can’t swallow. Mounting a local, individual Aryan offensive against centralization, clear-minded White men – and women – unapologetically view every alien pursuing his own self’s interest first as whatever the ages have proven typical of that human genre. Only if manipulated (or for private reason coming) into contact with such ones do we separately identify the members of other races.

Not wasting memory space on trifles is simply thrift, the avoidance of sacrificing excellence in pursuit of “helping” an alien who no better understands our motives or abilities than we his self-satisfaction with a foreign lifestyle. One best serves humanity by example alone. Minding foremost the business of each home front’s survival and welfare whether Bantu or Gaelic, whoever discovers a way to stop Jewish cowbirds from laying their exotic eggs among other nations will have done himself, the world and those Jewbirds a great favor, because all progress brings universal improvement.

Peggy Lee didn’t sing these lines just to insult that south-of-the-border attitude the girl was in a humorous way envying:

“The window she is broken and the rain is comin’ in,

“If someone doesn’t fix it I’ll be soaking to my skin,

“But if we wait a day or two the rain may go away,

“And we don’t need a window on such a sunny day;

“Mañana, mañana, mañana is soon enough for me...”

Yet her sassy lyrics did thereby wistfully note for all dreamers that certain realities on the ground are facts impossible to alter, so one shouldn’t try. Today’s incursion of foreign laborers and the enticements to hire them, like government-subsidized apathy about America’s offshored real jobs, are all by design. When – not “if” – the “money” crashes, “our”guest workers will revert to what’s typical of their human nature. We, too; and even the Hebrews, miscalculating for the umpteenth time; there is nothing new under the sun.

This present malaise our White folks are stupidly and obediently accommodating is nearing its terminus. Mestizos immigrating from Mexico with the help of opportunists among us whose greed won’t let them see the abyss ahead show no more interest in our native morals and customs than those directing the policies designed to lure them here: subversives who’ve almost destroyed a quondam inventiveness that produced an amazing self-sufficiency. Now a Southern Puberty Lechery Center pursues its agenda of “teaching tolerance,” the funny money is collapsing and our manufacturing base is gone. Blame it on worldwide Jewry? Well, yes, but that’s a problem we’ve dealt with for centuries; its repeating gambits having often alarmed sufficient numbers of us into preventing all the world’s data and goods exchange media from consolidating under a single aegis and, for lack of competition, dozing beyond recall. Since we can’t make the parasites and their stooges understand a nothingness is all that awaits surrender to the cupidity of non-self-governance, let us strive, in our interest and theirs, to arrest those trends by revamping the mediacracy into rival enterprises.

Yes, that’s a “radically” different plan from first divide, then conquer, but all the more possible if, prior to any expectation of redeeming our values and souls, we’ll get back down on our knees in prayer. You are reading just one of many newspapers rising to this day’s challenge by competing not only against alien Jewish arguments but even among our own for revivification the White man’s integrity.

Propaganda can enliven when fighting openly against an opposing viewpoint, or enslave if “teaching tolerance” is the only dogma tolerated. Such Marxist stalking of innocent children in the name of protecting them by law from their parents’ “hangups” is multicultural regimentation on steroids.

Many a misguided young idealist would “make amends” for the disparity between our affluent moral cohesiveness and those Third Worlders who “just need a hand up.” Many a 501©)(3) “Judeo” Christian Aryan feels his Church should welcome an exotic Marimba band, finds “God’s Chosen” ones “entitled” to retake their “Promised Land” by whatever means (as that entire “bunch” of “towelheads” over there never had a clue for “making the desert bloom”), and he’s free of obsolete ideas regarding sexual “orientation.” Many a White girl thinking to give the African a hand on has ended up bludgeoned and dismembered, yet many a multiculturalist who wouldn’t dare wander through certain “hoods” wants our lives to imitate the media “arts” of neighborhoods enjoying “strength through diversity.”

Indoctrinated to drink that stuff without pause, chased down with the daily sermon of rapture, many a child’s common sense gets blurred. In a foreign jungle swaying to alien rhythms, where there’s no choice it becomes clear: school-to-work, chicken in every pot, and who needs sound currency when a government that denies distinctions promises employment for all?

As John Peeples informed us in last month’s article quoting English historian Henry Hallam: “[T]he aggressor in a war (that is, he who begins it), is not the first who uses force, but the first who renders force necessary.” Yet, even that doesn’t go fully to any armed conflict’s incipience. Whoever decides upon a war, if capable of his convictions, already starts it. President Jimmy Carter blubbered the truth: “I have lusted after other women, therefore I’ve sinned.”

Satanic Zionism’s decision to displace the natural order merely cast that evil into the aggressor’s role. No child’s faith is in danger until so indoctrinated and willing to fight on the wrong side. Indeed, with each cowardly assassination of another patriot, the coming changeover attracts additional jurors who view death as preferable to the sting of dishonor. Cynics and true believers thus agree: “Heaven helps those who help themselves.” Think about that.

So, all around, we see the mediacracy’s frantic but subtly-spread tactical message: resistance is futile; you’ve lost control of the press and politicians, your currency is in the hands of supranational banksters and they are unstoppable. Today those TMFs boast their fantasized permanent power openly as if whatever comes down the tube for them to taunt into this week’s “news” can only reinforce such a bluff. But they’re vulnerable.

“Judeo” Christian evangelists mouth the same sentiments. And, whether ignorantly or complicitly, more than a few of these blatantly “anti-NWO” spokesmen ranting against and therefore supposedly resisting Zionism’s threat by exaggerating its power beyond all recall actually help implant the defeatist attitude desired by our enemy: a despair of Heaven’s grace. So we survivors must deprogram and reanimate those thus disarmed and needing a lift. Knowing not the how but the why of divine intervention, so long as possessing our breath of life we’ll keep fighting that evil visited upon everyone. For, though no less at home in this world than poison, filth, wildfires and floods, a sinister force attacking, checking and regularly challenging the natural order to verify its power, Satanic Zionism is also subject to the same Higher Law that we obey when vowing to keep on Heaven’s side.

Aggressive wars invariably start with an instigator’s decision to impose a cause for bloodshed’s necessity on those who must do the bleeding. So, if that cannon fodder would effectively wage peace instead, let them not dally until involved in another “preemptive strike” against some mythical enemy, a “war to end wars” or “make the world safe for democracy.” They’ll barge into Generalissimo’s war room, rip down the leapfrog charts of worldwide conquest, publish all his secret communications with “The Chosen” and restore self-government at home. Such tyranny is vulnerable – far from the victory it imagines possible by retaining control of politicians and TMFs, hiring and firing “conservative” television network anchors so as to keep before the public only those who limit their “attacks” against Zionism to decrying its “new world order” as a done deal. It’s not.

Why, then, doesn’t Heaven help us get “equal” media and coin power? Because ours is so much greater! A court fool must amuse, temptation is the circus barker’s job and financing such freak shows a banker’s. We may convert that bluff into Davidian courage by way of boycott and prayer, help ourselves to principled truth’s victory and spirit’s far superior potential. Leave those would-be adults playing with joysticks, tin soldiers and jpg money! Join us survivors moving away from them.

We who civilized and settled America prior to the Asiatic Jew’s arrival can with similar resolution discover and institute a new generation of more suitable trading and communicating tools. It’s high time the “national debt” were retired by denying that fiction’s legitimacy. But, but, investors have their documented claims? So does the Kenyan Jewish U. S. President; let them eat paper. Important is not to wait for rain before fixing that leak, nor endure further stench from the rigor mortis set in at Jekyll Island when its funeral is so very long past due.

Among our racial kindred having seen this Zionist tsunami swelling toward and inundating countless innocents since the 1960s, it’s little understood that Jews, too, dread what those psychopathic neuroses of their rabbis and “nonprofit” foundations shaking collection plates and useful thralls might now finally loose upon themselves. So let’s start preparing for that inevitably coming reversal of it all, and include such gluttons for self-punishment in our prayers as we mobilize to unfix their fixations on world rule.

This marshaling might be “reactionary,” as those evil Ashkenazi protocols claimed when originally attempting to bluff and outflank us with their futile Bolshevism, but the staying power of Aryan genius can recycle sows’ ears into silk purses anytime resolving to do so. We needed that grunting animation.

Those who think they’re such profound intellectuals can’t see it, but down at street level an average Joe or Jane already grasps at maturity the cyclical nature of motion. Another overstated “Pogrom” against the Jew’s perfidy is neither in his interest nor ours. By taking the media back from him we shall finally publish the holocaust hoax, making Alabama safe for sane government by exiling “our” Hebrews internally from influencing Aryan politics in any way – as the boldest, most judicious, discriminating act the White race has ever undertaken.

Whether or not the natural orbits are by design – and let’s assume which with great caution! – a rudimentary study of history can’t overlook the fact that every would-be world-ruling army, after bluffing all others to accept its invincibility and the futility of resistance, met defeat when trying to cross expanses of territorial ambition in a coldest of winters or driest wasteland. Elementary and self-generated, the reversal is certain. Even so, among those few returning from a vain campaign, fewer still may profit from the lesson; for an emperor is no less a slave to his habits than the lemming or Jew. Our cure for overweening pride is a daily dose of non-kosher modesty.

Zionism is mortal. We’ll attack its wars on Poverty, Drugs, Terror and the like by exposing their clandestine motives, getting aroused against that communist-planked horse belching at us “Anti-Semitism!” and “Racism!” epithets. Rather than cringing before them, let’s go singing and laughing at those non-Semitic expatriates from the steppes of Asia, converting such diatribes into unintended “stimulus” armaments.

We can win.
